Hay'dn, (Franz) Josef, renowned comp.; b. Rohrau-on-the-Leitha, Lower Austria, Mar. 31 (bapt. April 1), 1732; d. Vienna, May 31, 1809. He was the second son of Matthias Haydn, a wheelwright, the sexton and organist of the village church and a fine tenor singer. His mother, Maria Koller, was a daughter of the market-inspector, sang in the village choir, and had been cook in the household of Count Harrach, the lord of the village. Of their twelve children, three became musicians. On Sundays and holidays there was music at home, the father accompanying the voices on the harp, which he played by ear. At 5 years of age, Josef's musical aptitude was noticed by a paternal cousin, Johann Matthias Frankh, a good musician, 'Chorregent' and 'Schulrector' at Hainburg. He took the boy home with him and gave him elementary instruction, taught him Latin, singing, and to play the violin and other instrs. George Reutter, 'Hofcompositeur' and Kapellm. at St. Stephen's, Vienna, had his attention drawn to the boy's talent, and engaged him as chorister for St. Stephen's, undertaking his further education. H. was 8 years of age when he went to Vienna. Besides the daily service, and 2 hours' choir-practice, he studied religion, Latin, writing, and arithmetic. He also received instruction in singing, and on the violin and harpsichord, from Finsterbusch and Gegenbauer. Harmony and comp. were supposed to be taught by Reutter, who did not trouble himself about the matter. Still, unaided, H. applied himself assiduously to comp. and at 13 wrote a mass; though ridiculed, instead of encouraged, by Reutter, he persisted, and spent a little money, begged from his father for the renewal of his clothing, in the purchase of Fux's Gradus ad Parnassum and Mattheson's Vollkommener Kapellm., the principles of which he labored to master. In 1748 his voice began to break, and he was supplanted by his brother Michael, who had joined him in 1745. Reutter made a practical joke which H. played on a fellow-student a pretext for punishment and dismissal. Some poor but kindhearted friends gave him shelter; he also obtained a few pupils, and a sympathetic Viennese tradesman lent him 150 florins; he was thus enabled to rent an attic-room for himself, together with a rickety harpsichord. Here he could practise uninterruptedly, and Emanuel Bach's first 6 sonatas became his chief source of study. He also assiduously practised the violin, but was

(in his own words) 'no conjuror on any instrument, though able to play a concerto.' In the same house lived Metastasio, the poet, who taught him Italian, and recommended him as musical instructor to a Spanish family, the de Martinez, for their daughter Marianne. Through playing her accompaniments at the house of Porpora, her singing-teacher, he became acquainted with that surly old master, and in the performance of various menial services gained his good-will sufficiently to receive valuable instruction in composition from him, and a recommendation to the Venetian ambassador for a stipend, which was granted, of 50 francs a month. H. went with Porpora to the baths of Mannersdorf, and made the acquaintance of Bonno, Wagenseil, Dittersdorf, and Gluck. He was now 20 years of age, and had composed 6 trios, sonatas, and other instrl. music, his 1st Mass in F, and a comic opera, Der neue krumme Teufel, prod. at the Stadttheater, 1752 (a satire on the lame baron Affligio, official director of the court opera, and suppressed after the 3d representation, but afterwards given in Prague, Berlin, and other cities). He received 24 ducats for this work, of which the libretto alone has been preserved. One of his sonatas earned the good graces of Countess Thun, who engaged him as harpsichordist and singing-master. He also met Baron Karl Josef Fürnberg, for whom he composed his 1st quartet (1755), which was followed by seventeen others within a year. These two wealthy friends introduced him to Count Ferdinand Maximilian Morzin, who, in 1758, app. H. 'Musikdirector' and 'Kammercompositeur' at Lukaveč, n. Pilsen. In 1759 Prince Paul Anton Esterházy heard his 1st symph. in D, and asked the count to give him his composer; in 1760 H. entered his service as 2d Kapellm. at Eisenstadt, after the death of Werner becoming 1st Kapellm. The same year, H. married Maria Anna, the eldest daughter of an early benefactor, Keller, a wig-maker. He was in love with the second daughter, but she entered a convent, and H. was induced to marry the sister. Of an extravagant, vixenish, incompatible temperament, she made their married life miserable. In 1762 the 'great' Esterházy, Prince Nikolaus, succeeded his deceased brother, and under his régime the status of music and musicians was much improved. For the Prince's new palace at Esterház, besides the daily music, H. had to provide two weekly operatic performances and two formal concerts; while in his service, H. wrote some 30 symphonies, 40 quartets, divertimenti, 6 string-trios, a concerto for French horn, 12 orchl. minuets, clavier-works of all descriptions, and nearly all his operas, besides other vocal comps. His music became known throughout Europe; the official gazette alluded to him as 'our national favorite.' In 1780 he was elected member of the Modena Philharmonic Society; in 1784 Prince Henry of Prussia sent him a gold medal and his portrait; in 1785 he was commissioned to write a mass, The Seven Words on the Cross, for the Cathedral of Cadiz; in 1787 King Friedrich Wilhelm II gave him a diamond ring; many other distinctions were conferred upon him. During his stay at Esterház, his friendship for Mozart developed. In 1790 Prince Nikolaus died, and his son Anton curtailed the chapel-music, retaining H., however, as Kapellm., and increasing his stipend of 1,000 florins by an additional 400. He was virtually independent; his time was his own, and he added to his income by the sale of his works. For some time he had received pressing invitations to visit London. He had settled in Vienna, when Salomon appeared with a tempting offer, and induced him to accompany him, although his friends, especially Mozart, tried to dissuade him. In 1791 he arrived in England, and remained there eighteen months, fêted and petted by royalty and the nobility, the artistic 'lion' of a brilliant and successful season. In July, Oxford conferred on him the inevitable hon. degree of Mus. Doc.; and his best orchestral works, the 'Salomon symphonies,' were written during this visit. During his absence, Mozart had died (Dec. 5, 1791). In 1792 H. returned via Bonn to Frankfort, for the coronation of Emperor Franz II, and went thence to Vienna, also visiting his native place to witness the unveiling of a monument erected in his honor by Count Harrach, his mother's former employer. In this year he gave Beethoven the lessons with which the latter was so dissatisfied. In 1794 he revisited London; his former triumphs were repeated, and though pressed by the King to make England his home, he returned to his native land in affluence, at the invitation of a new Prince, to reorganize the Esterházy chapel, as Kapellm. But his fame, though great, was not yet in its zenith. In 1797 he comp. the Austrian National Anthem, 'The Emperor's Hymn.' In 1798, in his sixty-fifth year, was prod. his immortal oratorio Die Schöpfung (The Creation), and in 1801, Die Jahreszeiten (The Seasons). But his health began to fail, and thenceforward he lived in retirement. Only once did he again appear in public, in 1808, at a special performance of The Creation; but he had to be carried out before the finish, friends and pupils, among whom was Beethoven, surrounding him to take leave, B. bending to kiss the old man's hands and forehead. He lingered until 1809, when his end was hastened by the shock of the bombardment of Vienna by the French. He was buried in the Hundsthurm churchyard; eleven years later he was reinterred at Eisenstadt. In 1887 a splendid monument was erected to H. in Vienna.

Although of unprepossessing personal appearance, stern, dignified in aspect, and laconic in speech, he was of a humorous, agreeable, and amiable temperament, and artistically liberal-minded. The religious side of his character is shown in the inscriptions of all his scores, with the motto 'In Nomine Domini' or 'Soli Deo Gloria,' and all ending with 'Laus Deo.'

Haydn is the first great master of the new instrumental style which reached its highest development in the works of Beethoven. After the recent discovery of the works of Stamitz and his school (the 'Mannheim symphonists') H. can no longer be regarded as the 'Father of the symphony' or the 'Father of the modern orchestra.' Stamitz and his school had definitely established the sonata-form and differentiated the instruments of the orchestra before H. wrote his first quartet. But he availed himself of the forms and achievements of his predecessors, and his greater genius soon caused the earlier efforts to fall into undeserved oblivion. That his music accomplished this is the most eloquent tribute to its inherent power and greatness; it is not the mere creation of a new form that counts, but the artistic content. Beethoven did not create a single new form, and yet he is Beethoven. And thus, in spite of the recent discoveries, Haydn's position as the first 'great master' of the new instrumental style remains unshaken. His melodic vein is original and inexhaustible; the frank gayety and extravagant fun of 'Papa Haydn's' lighter music went straight to the hearts of the impressionable Viennese, and lent new vivacity to European concert-halls; in his moods of tenderness or of passion he is a worthy forerunner of Beethoven. And to all this, which in itself stamps him as one of the great composers of all times, must be added the marvellous fertility—prodigality—of his creative resources. The list of compositions is enormous. It comprises 125 SYMPHONIES (incl. overtures; H. himself reckoned his 66 divertimenti, cassations, sextets, etc., as symphonies), the meagre instrumentation of the earliest (strings, 2 oboes, 2 horns) contrasting strongly with that of the 12 'English' symphonies (strings, flute, 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, 2 trumpets, 2 kettledrums) and others of his maturity. Some having distinctive titles are the Farewell (Abschiedssymphonie, 1772), the Fire S. (Feuersymph., 1774), the Toy Symph. (Kindersymph.), La Chasse (1780), the Oxford (1788; perf. at Oxford in 1791), the Surprise (Symph. mit dem Paukenschlag, 1791), S. with the drum-roll (S. mit dem Paukenwirbel, 1795), The 7 Words on the Cross (Die 7 Worte am Kreuz, 1785; written for Cadiz Cathedral as a 'passione instrumentale' for Good Friday; rearranged later as a quartet, and again [by M. Haydn] as an oratorio). OTHER INSTRL. WORKS: 9 vln.-concertos, 6 'cello-concertos, 16 concertos for other instrs. (lyre, barytone, double-bass, flute, horn), 77 string-quartets, 32 trios for strings and other instrl. combinations (excl. pf.), 175 numbers f. barytone, 4 vln.-sonatas, 6 duets f. vln. and vla., 7 nocturnes f. lyre; numerous minor pieces;—for harpsichord or pf.: 20 concertos, 38 pf.-trios (35 w. vln. and 'cello, 3 w. flute and 'cello), 53 sonatas and divertimenti, 4 sonatas w. vln.; 9 minor pcs.—VOCAL: 3 oratorios (Creation; Seasons; Il ritorno di Tobia), several cantatas, 14 masses, 2 Te Deums, a Stabat Mater, 13 offertories, motets, arias, etc.; OPERAS: Der neue krumme Teufel [as above]; La vera costanza (written 1776 for the Vienna Court Th., but not perf. there; prod. as Laurette in Paris, 1791); Lo Speziale, 1-act comic opera (Esterház, 1768; Vienna, private perf., 1770; revived, as Der Apotheker, at Dresden Court Th., 1895); 4 Italian comedies, 14 Ital. opere buffe (incl. Lo Speziale), and 5 marionette-operas (all probably prod. at Eisenstadt and Esterház); Orfeo (written in London; unfinished); music to several plays; 22 detached arias; a cantata for solo voice and pf., Ariana a Naxos; a cantata for vocal solo and barytone, Deutschlands Klage auf den Tod Friedrichs des Grossen; The 10 Commandments in canon-form (later, with different words, as Die 10 Gesetze der Kunst; 36 German songs; 12 canzonets; the Austrian National Hymn; other songs; collections of Scotch and Welsh folk-songs; vocal duets, trios, etc.

Hay'dn, (Johann) Michael, organist and sacred composer, brother of preceding; born Rohrau, Sept. 14, 1737; d. Salzburg, Aug. 10, 1806. Soprano chorister, with remarkable voice three octaves in compass, at St. Stephen's, Vienna, 1745–55, replacing his brother, Josef. Studied vln. and organ, and became asst.-organist; in 1757, Kapellm. at Grosswardein; in 1762, Concertmeister and director at Salzburg to Archbishop Sigismund, and, in 1777, organist of the Cathedral and St. Peter's church there. He married the daughter of Kapellm. Lipp, Maria Magdalena, an excellent soprano singer, extolled by Mozart for her virtues. By the French occupation of Salzburg in 1800 he lost his property, but his brother and friends liberally assisted him, and the Empress Maria Theresa rewarded him handsomely for a mass composed at her command, in which she sang the soprano solos. He opened a school of composition, and educated many distinguished pupils, including Reicha and Carl M. von Weber. In 1833 Martin Bischofsreiter, a Benedictine monk, published Partitur-Fundamente, a coll. of thorough-bass exercises written by M. H. for his scholars. He composed a mass and vespers for Prince Esterházy, who twice offered to make him vice-Kapellm. of his chapel; but H. refused, hoping the Salzburg chapel would be reorganized. He was elected a member of the Stockholm Academy. A prolific composer, his best works were his sacred compositions, which his brother held in high estimation, ranking them above his own. He was chary of publication, and rejected Breitkopf & Härtel's frequent advances.—Works: VOCAL: About 360 church-comps., including oratorios, masses, cantatas, 2 requiems, graduals, etc.; also operas, operettas, 4-part songs, songs, and canons in 4 and 5 parts. Hell'er, Stephen, pianist, teacher, and composer; b. Pest, May 15, 1813 [date given by H. himself in a letter to R. Schumann (May 15, 1836), stating that he is celebrating his 23d birthday]; d. Paris, Jan. 14, 1888. His father intended him for a lawyer, and he was educated at the College of the Piaristes. His first instructor in piano-playing was F. Bräuer. At nine years of age he performed in public with such success that he was sent to Vienna to study under Czerny; but it was Anton Halm who continued his tuition. As early as 1827 he gave concerts in Vienna, and from 1829–32 made a concert-tour with his father through Hungary, Poland, and Germany. At Pest he received a few elementary harmony-lessons from Czibulka. At Augsburg he was taken ill, and was adopted by a wealthy family, who furthered his musical instruction and with whom he remained, perfecting himself in composition, until 1838, when he went to Paris. He became the friend of Liszt, Chopin, Berlioz, and others, and as a concert-player and teacher was in high repute. His first composition, written in Augsburg, and published at Leipzig and Hamburg, had received the praise of Schumann. In 1849 he visited London, where his thoughtful and refined playing charmed a large circle, though nervousness prevented frequent appearances in public. Again in 1862 he played at the Crystal Palace with Hallé. The rest of his life was spent in Paris. His music, solely for pf., is distinguished for elegance and refinement, varied and forceful rhythms, exquisite melody, bold and original thematic treatment, and, above all, for a poetic sentiment to which distinctive titles in many cases give the key. Hartmann; H. Barbedette also published a sketch (1876; English, 1877). The standard biogr. is by R. Schütz, St. H. (Leipzig, 1911).

Helm'holtz, Hermann (Ludwig Ferdinand) von, distinguished physician, physiologist, and physicist; b. Potsdam, Aug. 31, 1821; d. Charlottenburg, Sept. 8, 1894. His father was a professor in the Potsdam Gymnasium, and there H. received his education. His mother, Caroline Penn, was of English extraction. He studied medicine in the Military Institute of Berlin, graduated M.D., and was attached to the staff of La Charité hospital (1842). In 1843 he was appointed military surgeon at Potsdam; was recalled to Berlin as teacher of Anatomy (for artists) at the Academy of Fine Arts (1848); 1849, Prof. of Physiology at the University of Königsberg; 1855, Prof. of Anat. and Physiology at Bonn; 1858, Prof. of Physiol. at Heidelberg; elected correspondent of the Berlin Academy of Sciences (Physical section) in 1870; and app. Professor of Physics at Berlin in 1871. His principal publications, which enjoy a world-wide reputation, have been translated into various languages (The Conservation of Force, 1847; Manual of Physiological Operations, 1856–66; Popular Scientific Lectures, 1865–76). The work of most interest to musicians, and indispensable for students of musical science, is his Sensations of Tone as a Physiological Basis for the Theory of Music [Lehre von den Tonempfindungen als physiologische Grundlage für die Theorie der Musik] (Brunswick, 1863; 6th ed. 1913; translated into English, by Ellis, 1875). By a long series of careful experiments, H. established a sure physical foundation for the phenomena manifested by musical tones, either single or combined. He supplements and completes the theories of Rameau, Tartini, Wheatstone, Corti, and others, furnishing impregnable formulæ for all classes of consonant and dissonant tone-effects, and proving with scientific precision what Hauptmann and his school sought to establish by laborious dialectic processes. The laws governing the differences in quality of tone (timbre, tone-color) in different instrs. and voices, covering the whole field of harmonic, differential, and summational tones; the physiology of the major triad; the nature and limits of musical perception by the human ear—these are the chief results at which H. has arrived. His explanation of the nature of the minor triad, and of dissonances, has been supplemented by the works of von Oettingen and H. Lotze (in theory) and Hugo Riemann (in practice). H.'s magnum opus likewise reviews at length, from a scientific standpoint, the scales of the Arabians, Persians, Greeks, etc.; develops a theory of the pitch of vowel-sounds (important for vocalists); deduces a series of 'sound-colors' (Klangfarben) corresponding to the arrangement of the solar spectrum; etc.—Cf. S. Epstein, H. v. H. als Mensch u. Gelehrter (Stuttgart, 1896); L. Königsberger, H. v. H. (3 vols., Brunswick, 1902–3).

Between seasons she has regularly appeared in Berlin, and as a star in the principal cities of Europe, everywhere acknowledged as one of the few supreme coloratura artists now living, with the temperament of the real dramatic singer; in fact, her favorite rôle is the soulful Eva in Die Meistersinger. Her voice, remarkably even throughout its entire compass, is wonderfully flexible and vibrant, and her vocal technic is wellnigh flawless. Her rôles include Violetta, Gilda, Amelia (Ballo in Maschera), Bastienne, Donna Anna, Olympia (Contes d'Hoffmann), Queen of the Night, and the Feldmarschallin (Rosenkavalier.)

His great success there led to engagements at Cov. Garden (1911) and the M. O. H., where he was received with tremendous applause on his first appearance as Lohengrin (Dec. 22, 1911); at the end of the season several critics declared him the finest Wagnerian tenor heard at the M. In 1831, an allowance from King Ludwig I enabled him to continue pf.-study with Hummel at Weimar, whence he went to Vienna, for a two-years' course in theory under Sechter. Assiduous study and practice injured his health, and in 1836 he was ordered to Carlsbad. In 1837 he made a short tour through Germany, and aroused the greatest enthusiasm. He married at Breslau the same year, and went to Petrograd in 1838. He was appointed chamber-pianist to the Empress, and music-teacher to the princes. Later he was app. inspector of mus. instruction of the Imperial educational institutions for girls, and received the Order of Vladimir. His playing was of the most poetically inspired character, and highly individualized, his technical specialty being the legato execution of widely-extended chords and arpeggios, for the practice of which he composed extremely difficult extension-studies. In 1805, app. prof. of philosophy at Göttingen; 1809–35, at Königsberg; 1835 (to his death) again at Göttingen. The determination of the proportions of intervals is treated of in his Psychologische Bemerkungen zur Tonlehre (1811), and the esthetics of music in chap. ix of his Encyclopædia of Philosophy. While of interest to advanced musicians, they contribute but little to the knowledge of the natural laws of creative music. After his marriage in 1886 to Therese Foerster, prima donna at the Court Opera in Vienna, he accepted the position of first 'cellist at the newly established German opera at the M. O. H. in New York, appearing also frequently as soloist (his own concerto with the Philh. Soc., etc.); was also first 'cellist in Th. Thomas' orch., and first 'cellist and asst.-conductor of the Seidl orch.; from 1889–91 he was assoc. conductor of the Worcester Festival, for which he wrote an oratorio, The Captive (1891). In 1893 he succeeded P. S. Gilmore as Bandmaster of the famous 22d Reg. band. In the same year Wm. MacDonald, the manager of the Bostonians, persuaded H. to try his hand at light opera, offering him the libretto of Prince Ananias. The emphatic success which the work scored (N. Y., Nov. 20, 1894) decided H.'s further career as a composer. From 1898–1904 he was conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orch.; in 1905, and again in 1906, he was invited by the N. Y. Philh. Soc. as one of a number of 'star' conductors (Colonne, Wood, Safonov, Weingartner, etc.); in 1900 he came specially from Pittsburgh to direct at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., an orch. of 420 performers for the benefit of the sufferers in the Galveston flood; in 1906 he directed a similar monster concert at the Hippodrome for the sufferers in the San Francisco earthquake. H.'s fame as a composer rests upon his light operas, which owe their success to spontaneity of melodic invention, piquancy of rhythm and variety of style. From the simplicity of the earlier works there is a gradual evolution toward greater complexity in style and technic, so that some numbers in later works sound almost like excerpts from grand opera. Yet his two attempts in the grand style, Natoma (Philadelphia, Feb. 21, 1911) and Madeleine (M. O. H., 1913), did not meet with lasting success because of the composer's evident inability to sustain his inspiration in a style foreign to his native talent.—Works: The operas Prince Ananias (N. Y., 1894), The Wizard of the Nile (Chicago, 1895), The Gold Bug (N. Y., 1896), The Serenade (Cleveland, 1897), The Idols' Eye (Troy, 1897), The Fortune Teller (Buffalo, 1898), Cyrano de Bergerac (Montreal, 1899), The Singing Girl (ib., 1899), The Ameer (Scranton, 1899), The Viceroy (San Francisco, 1900), Babes in Toyland (Chicago, 1903), Babette (Washington, 1903), It Happened in Nordland (Harrisburg, 1904), Miss Dolly Dollars (Rochester, 1905), Wonderland, or Alice and the Eight Princesses (Buffalo, 1905), Mlle. Modiste (Trenton, 1905), The Red Mill (N. Y., 1906), Dream City (ib., 1906), The Magic Knight (ib., 1906), The Tattooed Man (Baltimore, 1907), The Rose of Algeria (Atlantic City, 1908), Little Nemo (Philadelphia, 1908), The Prima Donna (Chicago, 1908), Old Dutch (Wilkesbarre, 1909), Naughty Marietta (Syracuse, 1910), When Sweet Sixteen (Springfield, Mass., 1910), Mlle. Rosita (Boston, 1911), The Lady of the Slippers (1912), The Madcap Duchess (Rochester, 1913), Sweethearts (Baltimore, 1913), The Débutante (Atlantic City, 1914), The Only Girl (N. Y., 1914), Princess Pat (ib., 1915). In 1916 he made a new and successful departure with elaborate music to the photo-play The Fall of a Nation. Besides the above works he has written for orch. a symphonic poem, Hero and Leander; Serenade, op. 12; a second concerto for vcl., op. 30; Suite romantique, op. 31; the suites Woodland Fancies and Columbus; Irish Rhapsody; male choruses; songs. He applied himself (on Grieg's advice) to the study of masterworks; studied with Humperdinck one year (1893–4), and then went to Leipzig (where some of his scores were publ.), and thence to Berlin, where, on Nov. 7, 1895, his Symphony in C and a Concert-overture in D m. were brought out by the Philh. Distinguished pupil of St. Gallen Abbey; was a monk in Reichenau monastery. His best-known work (containing valuable historical notices on music) is a chronology from the foundation of Rome to 1054. It has been republ. several times, and is to be found in Peres' (Pertz's) Monumenta (vol. v). Two small treatises, supposed to have been lost, were found in the Imperial Library, Vienna, by Gerbert, and publ. in his 'Scriptores' (ii). The 1st, 'Musical,' is an exposition of the Greek modes, and gives an example of Hucbald's notation of the tenth century. The 2d, Versus Hermanni ad discernendum, contains the key of an original notation by Greek and Latin letters. In the indication of a change in pitch, it had an advantage over neume-notation. H.'s notation is written above the neume-notation in some MSS. of the 11th and 12th centuries in the Munich Libr.

Hérold [ā-rŏhld'], Louis-Joseph-Ferdinand, dramatic composer and pianist; b. Paris, Jan. 28, 1791; d. at Thernes, n. Paris, Jan. 19, 1833. His father, François-Joseph H. [pupil of Ph. E. Bach], a pianoforte-teacher and composer of merit, did not desire his son to become a musician, and sent him to the Hix school, where his aptitude for music was noticed by Fétis, then assistant-teacher there. But after his father's death (1802), H. could follow his natural bent; in 1806 he entered the Cons., studying the piano under Louis Adam, and winning first prize for piano-playing in 1810. He studied harmony under Catel, and (from 1811) composition under Méhul; in 1812 his cantata Mlle. de la Vallière gained the Prix de Rome (the MS. score is in the Conservatory Library with works composed during his three years' study in Rome). From Rome he went to Naples, where he became pianist to Queen Caroline; here he produced his first opera, La gioventù di Enrico Quinto (1815), which was well received. From Naples he went to Vienna, and after a few months' stay returned to Paris in 1815, where he finished the score of Boieldieu's Charles de France, an 'opéra d'occasion,' produced at the Opéra-Comique, 1816. Its flattering reception led to the production of Les Rosières (1817), which, as well as La Clochette, which followed in the same year, was very successful. Unable for a time to obtain good original libretti, he now wrote piano-fantasias and minor pieces, and produced a few operas (Le premier venu, 1818; Les Troqueurs, 1819; l'Amour platonique, 1819 [only rehearsed]; and l'Auteur mort et vivant, 1820), the ill-success of which caused him to distrust his natural talent, and to imitate, in several succeeding stage-works, the style then in vogue—that of Rossini. With the 3-act comedy-opera Marie (1826) H. returned, however, to his true element, and won instant and brilliant success. Meantime (1824) he had obtained the post of pianist at the Italian Opera, but soon relinquished it for that of chorusmaster (1824–6); during this period he brought out Les Muletiers, Lasthénie, Vendôme en Espagne, Le Roi René, and Le Lapin blanc. In 1827 he was appointed 'chef du chant' at the Grand Opéra, for which he wrote several poetic and graceful ballets (Astolphe et Joconde, La Somnambule, Lydie, La Belle au Bois dormant, and La Fille mal gardée); La Somnambule furnished Bellini with the subject of his popular opera. In 1828 H. was received into the Legion of Honor. In 1829 appeared l'Illusion, a one-act opera, full of charming numbers. Emmeline (1830) was a failure, but the brilliant success of Zampa (1831) placed H. in the first rank of French composers. He wrote l'Auberge d'Aurey (1830) jointly with Carafa; La Marquise de Brinvilliers (1831) in collaboration with Auber, Batton, Berton, Blangini, Boieldieu, Carafa, Cherubini, and Paër; and also produced La Médicine sans médecin (1832), a one-act opera. His last work, Le Pré aux clercs (1832), has had remarkable vogue in France. Shortly after the production of Zampa his health had begun to decline, and he died of consumption in his forty-second year. His unfinished opera Ludovic was successfully completed by Halévy. —Hérold's piano-music, comprising 55 opus-numbers, consists of sonatas, caprices, rondos, divertissements, fantaisies, variations, and potpourris.—Busts of H. by Danton and Demesnay are in the foyer of the New Opera house; one by Charles Gauthier is in the library of the Conservatoire.—Cf. A. Jouvin, Hérold, sa vie et ses œuvres (Paris, 1868); A. Pougin, H. (Paris, 1906; throughout this book the accent over the composer's name is omitted).

H. as conductor of the Wagner works. His enthusiasm made a favorable impression, although his zeal sometimes elicited excessive sonority from the orch. But in time he overcame this defect and secured splendid tonal balance from his forces. During thirteen consecutive seasons he also conducted many novelties, among them all the works of American composers brought out at the M. O. H. He has the distinction of having conducted the first performance of Parsifal outside of Bayreuth (Dec. 24, 1903). Because of this 'desecration' not only Bayreuth but all German opera-houses have been barred to him. He resigned in the spring of 1915; conducted the première of Parker's Fairyland at the Panama Exposition (Los Angeles, July 1, 1915). Since then, conductor of the San Francisco Symph. Orch. Scion of a wealthy Jewish family, he early became a pupil of Hofmann (vln.), Aloys Schmitt (pf.), and Vollweiler (harm. and cpt.); at 10 he played a Mozart concerto in public, and at 12 began composition. From 1825 he was a pupil of Hummel at Weimar; accompanied him to Vienna in 1827 (where his op. 4, a string-quartet, was publ.), and, as a boy of 15, saw Beethoven on his deathbed. From 1828–35 he lived in Paris, teaching for a time in Choron's School of Music, but afterwards living independently, perfecting himself as a pianist and composer, and on intimate terms with celebrated musicians. He gave concerts with Fétis and Baillot, and shone as an interpreter of Beethoven. In 1836, on his father's death, he returned to Frankfort, and during Schelble's illness cond. the Cäcilien-Verein. Aided by Rossini, in 1839 he (unsuccessfully) prod. his opera Romilda at Milan, and commenced an oratorio, Die Zerstörung Jerusalems, which impressed Mendelssohn, who invited him to Leipzig to superintend its production at the Gewandhaus (1840). In 1849 he was elected a member of the Royal Academy of Fine Arts, Berlin; in 1868 Bonn Univ. gave him the hon. title of Dr. In 1884 he retired.—Although he freely expressed his antipathy to many features of the 'new school' of German music, he was liberal-minded, and placed many of Wagner's works on his concert-programs. His easy circumstances, classical training, and artistic and friendly association with Spohr, Hauptmann, and especially Mendelssohn, naturally influenced his style, which also has a strong leaning toward romanticism; his compositions, numbering over 200, are not so remarkable for originality and profundity as for their elegant form, flowing melody, sparkling rhythm, and clarity of harmony. They include 6 operas (the 3 noted above, and Der Advokat, Cologne, 1854; Die Catacomben, Wiesbaden, 1862; and Der Deserteur, Cologne, 1865); 2 oratorios (Saul, 1858, was the second); 6 cantatas (Lorelei, Nal und Damajanti, Israels Siegesgesang, Prometheus, Rebecca, Prinz Papagei); a ballad (Richard Löwenherz, 1883) f. soli, chorus and orch.; psalms, motets, etc.; quartets for male chorus, mixed chorus, and female chorus; over 100 songs f. solo voice w. pf., over 30 duets w. piano, 24 3-part songs for female voices and piano, 29 4-part songs; piano-music (concertos in A♭, F m. and C; sonatas; suites, Moderne, Sérieuse; about 30 numbers of smaller pcs.; études; Operette ohne Text f. 4 hands); fine chamber-music (vln.-sonatas, canonical suite f. pf. and vln., Concertstück in A m. f. pf. and 'cello, 'cello-sonatas, five pf.-trios, 3 pf.-quartets, 5 string-quartets); 3 overtures, 3 symphonies, etc. He was also a very successful lecturer, and a contributor to the 'Kölnische Zeitung'; some of his papers were publ. in collected form as Die Musik und das Publikum (1864); L. van Beethoven (1871); Aus dem Tonleben unsrer Zeit (1868, 2 vols.; new series, 1871). Hil'ler (Hüller), Johann Adam, dram. comp.; b. Wendisch-Ossig, n. Görlitz, Dec. 25, 1728; d. Leipzig, June 16, 1804. His father, a schoolmaster, cantor, and parish-clerk, d. when the boy was 6 years of age. His fine soprano voice obtained him free instruction at the Görlitz Gymnasium, whence he proceeded to the Kreuzschule, Dresden, as a pupil of Homilius (pf. and thorough-bass), and later (1751) to the Univ. at Leipzig. While in Leipzig, he earned a meagre subsistence as flutist and singer in Doles' grand concerts, and as a music-teacher. In 1754 he became tutor to the son of Count Brühl at Dresden, whom he accompanied in 1758 to Leipzig. Here he finally settled, and devoted himself to a revival of the Subscription Concerts in 1763. These developed into the famous 'Gewandhaus' concerts, of which he was app. cond. In 1771 he founded a singing-school, and from 1789–1801 was Cantor and Musikdirektor of the Thomasschule as successor of Doles. As composer, cond., teacher and author his industry was astonishing.—H. was the originator of the 'Singspiel,' the precursor of German 'comedy-opera', which had a distinct development contemporaneously with Italian opera buffa and French opéra comique. A peculiar (not wholly unjustifiable) notion of his was, to let the gentry in his dramatic works sing arias and the like, while to persons of low degree were given simple songs, etc. His Singspiele were the following: Der Teufel ist los (1st part, Die verwandelten Weiber; 2d part, Der lustige Schuster [Leipzig, 1766]); Lisuart und Dariolette (ib., 1766); Lottchen am Hofe (originally prod. as Lottchen, oder Das Bauermädchen am Hofe, ib., 1767); Die Liebe auf dem Lande (ib., 1768); Die Jagd (Weimar, 1770); Der Dorfbalbier (Leipzig, 1771); Der Aerndtekranz (ib., 1771); Die Musen (ib., 1772); Der Krieg (Berlin, 1772); Die Jubelhochzeit (originally prod. as Das Jubelfest, Hamburg, 1773); Das Grab des Mufti (Leipzig, 1779). No record of first performances is available for Poltis, oder das gerettete Troja (libretto printed Leipzig, 1773), and Der neue Gutsherr (libr. pr. ib., 1781). The songs of these operettas became, and many of them are still, exceedingly popular. Among his other compositions may be mentioned a Passion cantata, funeral music in honor of Hasse, the 100th Psalm, symphonies and partitas. He edited Chr. Felix Weisse's Lieder für

Kinder, also 50 geistliche Lieder für Kinder, Choral-Melodien zu Gellerts geistlichen Oden, Vierstimmige Chorarien, a Choralbuch, cantatas, etc. His writings include 'Wöchentliche Nachrichten und Anmerkungen, die Musik betreffend' (1766–70, the earliest musical paper); Lebensbeschreibungen berühmter Musikgelehrten und Tonkünstler (1784); Nachricht von der Aufführung des Händel'schen Messias in der Domkirche zu Berlin, 19. Mai 1786; Über Metastasio und seine Werke (1786); Anweisung zum musikalisch richtigen Gesang (1774); Anweisung zum musikalisch zierlichen Gesang (1780); Anweisung zum Violinspiel (1792). He prepared the 2d ed. of Adlung's Anleitung zur musikalischen Gelahrtheit (with comments, 1783), arranged Pergolesi's Stabat Mater for four-part chorus, and publ. Handel's Jubilate, Haydn's Stabat Mater, Graun's Tod Jesu, and Hasse's Pilgrime auf Golgatha.—Biography by Carl Peiser (Leipzig, 1895).—See Q.-Lex.

He was elected member of the Berlin R. Acad. of Arts in 1882; member of the Senate in 1898. Hof'mann, Josef, concert-pianist; born Podgorze, near Cracow, Jan. 20, 1876. Pupil of his father Casimir [prof. of harm. and comp. at Warsaw Cons., cond. of W. opera]. Played in public at 6; at 9 made tour of Germany, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, France and England; played 1887–8 in America (52 concerts in 2½ months).

Under this strain the boy's health broke down, and he retired from public activity for six years, devoting the time to the study of comp. and orchestration under H. Urban in Berlin. For two years of this period he travelled twice a week to Dresden for pf.-lessons from A. Rubinstein, who regarded young H. as one of the most remarkable pianistic geniuses he had ever heard of. In Nov., 1894, he reappeared in Dresden with enormous success; first tour of Russia in 1896 (followed by 12 since then); returned to the U. S. in 1898, and has been heard there almost every season, enjoying a popularity second to that of no other artist. In 1905 he married an American lady, Mrs. G. P. Eustis. H. is one of those great artists who, free from personal vanity, identify themselves completely with the composer they interpret. Technic he has, as a matter of course, in superabundance; perhaps his most striking characteristic is his marvellous variety of tonal shading, almost rivalling the effects of the orchestra; his conception is marked by nobility and grandeur; without a trace of eccentricity, he is a powerfully individual artist. In his earlier years he wrote 5 concertos for pf. and orch., a set of variations, a fugue and minor pieces for pf., but he has never played his own works. That he is an earnest thinker concerning the technical problems of his art he has shown in his eminently practical book Piano-Playing with Piano-Questions answered (1914).

He is a composer of extreme tendencies, attracted by the sensational and grotesque, showing little regard for form or euphony; his chamber-music sounds forced and thin, his orchestral music overloaded with bizarre and sensational effects in harmony and instrumentation.—Works: Tone-poems The Raven (1900), The Viking, Ulalume, Byron, Queen Mab, The Bells (w. ch.), The Skeleton in Armor, The Mask of the Red Death; a symphony, Apollo and the Seaman; Vars. for orch., Three Blind Mice and The Girl I left behind me; Dreamland Suite; Les Hommages, suite; Vars. on 'Auld Lang Syne'; The Haunted Palace, fantasy for orch.; an overture, The New Renaissance; the ballets The Red Masque, The Moth, The Enchanted Garden; an opera, Pierrot and Pierrette (London, 1909). The system of tuition was the French one of Wilhem, which H. had studied in Paris(1839–40), and modified to suit English requirements. Notwithstanding jealous and bitter criticism, it became so successful and popular that from 1840–60 25,000 persons passed through its classes. In 1847 his scholars and admirers erected, and presented him with, St. Martin's Hall for the public performances of his pupils. Inaugurated 1850, it was burned in 1860. Hum'mel, Johann Nepomuk, celebrated pianist and comp.; b. Presburg, Nov. 14, 1778; d. Weimar, Oct. 17, 1837. Son and pupil of Joseph H., music-master of the Wartberg Military School. In 1786 the father was app. Kapellm. of Schikaneder's Th., Vienna, and there Mozart interested himself in young H., took him into his house, and for two years instructed him. He made his début in 1787 at a concert given by Mozart in Dresden; 1788–93 he accomp. his father on professional concert-tours as pianist, visiting Germany, Denmark, Scotland, England and Holland. On his return to Vienna he applied himself to serious study in cpt. under Albrechtsberger, and profited by the counsel of Haydn and Salieri in comp. From 1804–11, he acted as deputy-Kapellm. for Haydn, in Prince Esterházy's service. From 1811–16 he taught and comp. in Vienna; in 1816, was app. court Kapellm. at Stuttgart, and in 1819 at Weimar. He obtained frequent leaves of absence for professional tours; in 1822 he went to Petrograd with the Grand Duchess Marie Pavlovna; in 1825 to Paris, where he was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honor; in 1826 visited Belgium and Holland, in 1827 Vienna, in 1828 Warsaw, and France again in 1829. In 1830 and '33 he went to England, and cond. a season of German opera at the King's Th., London. The last years of his life were marked by ill-health and much suffering. He was one of the most famous piano-virtuosi and extemporists of his period, and at one time was considered the equal of Beethoven. His comps. are distinguished for excellence of construction and brilliancy of ornament. They number 124, and include 9 operas, cantatas, ballets, now forgotten; 3 masses for 4 voices, orch. and org., in B♭, E♭, and D; a Graduale and Offertorium, still in use in Austrian churches; a long list of piano-comps.—7 concertos and some sonatas remain standard pieces—and much concerted music, of which the septet in D m., op. 74, is considered a masterpiece. H.'s Anweisung zum Pianofortespiel (1828), an elaborate instruction-book, and one of the first to give a sensible method of fingering, appeared too late to be of much use.—His wife, Elisabeth H., née Röckl, b. 1793, d. Weimar, March, 1883, was an opera-singer.—See Q.-Lex.

Hum'mel, Joseph Friedrich, b. Innsbruck, Aug. 14, 1841; d. Salzburg, 1908. Pupil of Munich Cons. From 1861–80 theatre-Kapellm. at Glarus, Aix-la-Chapelle, Innsbruck, Troppau, Linz, Brünn, and Vienna. From 1880–1907, dir. of the Mozarteum, Salzburg, music-teacher at the Training College, and cond. of the 'Liedertafel.'

Hum'perdinck, Engelbert, b. Siegburg, n. Bonn, Sept. 1, 1854. Studied architecture in Cologne, where Ferd. Hiller persuaded him to devote himself to music. Entered Cologne Cons., studied harm. and comp. with Hiller, Gernsheim and Jensen; piano (Seiss and Mertke); 'cello (Rensburg and Ehlert). After 4 years, won Mozart scholarship at Frankfort; then studied 2 years at Munich with Franz Lachner, also in Cons. under Rheinberger and Bärmann. Publ. several comps., Humoreske for orch. and Die Wallfahrt nach Kevlaar for chorus, which in 1897 won the Mendelssohn prize (3,000 marks) in Berlin; in 1881 he won the Meyerbeer prize (7,600 marks), and visited Italy and France. In Italy he met Wagner, who invited him to be his guest at Bayreuth. Here H. was privileged to assist the master in preparing the score of Parsifal for publication, rendering the same services that Richter and Seidl had performed for the scores of the Ring dramas. From that time on the relations between H. and the Wagner family have remained the most cordial; for a few years later Siegfried Wagner became H.'s pupil and received his entire musical education from him. From 1885–7 H. was prof. in the Cons. in Barcelona; after his return to Germany he taught a short time in Cologne, and then went to Mayence in the employ of B. Schott's Söhne; in 1890 he became prof. at Hoch's Cons. in Frankfort, and mus. critic for the 'Frankfurter Zeitung.' On Dec. 23, 1893, he made his début in Weimar as a dramatic composer with the 2-act fairy-opera Hänsel und Gretel (text by his sister, Adelheid Wette). Aside from the intrinsic merit of the score, which would have compelled success at any time, the work appeared at the psychological moment. The German public, weary of the inflated bombast of the Wagner-imitators, had welcomed the blood-and-thunder effects of Italian 'verismo' as a relief from the labored dullness of its native composers. And now a new composer, drawing inspiration from the inexhaustible fount of native folk-music, found true musical expression for a thoroughly German subject, and the public was electrified. Before a year had passed, the work was in the répertoire of every German opera house; even abroad its success was extraordinary and lasting (American première at Daly's Th., N. Y., Oct. 8, 1895). As soon as H. had shown a new path a host of imitators ransacked German fairy-lore, but with the usual ill-success of imitators. As H.'s health had never been robust, he determined after this success to give up teaching, and in 1896 he retired to Boppard on the Rhine to devote himself entirely to composition. His next work was Die sieben Geislein (1897), a fairy-play for children, written for voice and piano; in 1898 he wrote incidental music to E. Rosmer's Königskinder, of which the instrumental numbers made a more favorable impression than the melodramatic portions. In 1900 he accepted a call as director (with practically nominal duties) of the 'Akademische Meisterschule' in Berlin, where he has resided since then. Neither of his next two operas, Dornröschen (Frankfort, 1902) and a comedy-opera Die Heirat wider Willen (Berlin, 1905), was successful; the libretti are poor, and the music lacks the naïveté of Hänsel und Gretel. H. now turned to writing incid. music, illustrating Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice (1905), Winter's Tale (1906), Tempest (1906), Aristophanes' Lysistrata (1908) and Maeterlinck's l'Oiseau bleu (1910). In 1908 he recast the music of Königskinder as a real opera; at the première at the M. O. H. in New York (Dec. 28, 1910), the composer was given a veritable ovation, and the work is one of the very few that have maintained themselves in the répertoire; it was received with much less enthusiasm in Germany. H.'s latest works are elaborate incidental music to Vollmöller's Mirakel (Berlin, 1911) and another comedy-opera, Die Marketenderin (Cologne, 1914). Had not the outbreak of the war lent a special interest to the subject, this last work could scarcely have escaped the fate of a complete fiasco. Besides the works enumerated, H. has written incid. music to Der Richter von Zalamea (1896), a choral ballade, Das Glück von Edenhall; Maurische Rhapsodie for orch. (1889); a Symphony in C (MS.). Of his songs several, especially the 'Kinderlieder,' are likely to become the property of the entire nation. H.'s fame still rests upon his one opera Hänsel und Gretel, which in the history of opera will stand as a landmark showing the path to new development. His power of specific thematic invention is limited, but his command of technic is supreme.—Cf. G. Münzer, E. H., in 'Monographien moderner Musiker' (vol. i, Leipzig, 1906); E. Istel, German Opera since Richard Wagner, in 'Musical Quarterly' (April,1915); O. Besch, E. H. (Leipzig, 1915).

His real career did not begin until the fall of 1912, when he undertook his second European tour, scoring overwhelming successes everywhere; since then he has concertized without interruption and won for himself a place among the foremost contemporary pianists. d'Indy [dăn-dē'], (Paul-Marie-Théodore-) Vincent, b. Paris, Mar. 27, 1851. Owing to the early death of his mother his education was directed entirely by his grandmother, a woman of culture and refinement who had known Grétry and Monsigny, and who had shown a remarkable appreciation of the works of Beethoven when that master was still living. From 1862–5 he studied pf. with Diémer, and later harm. and theory with Marmontel and Lavignac. In 1869 he made the acquaintance of H. Duparc, and with him spent much time studying the masterpieces of Bach, Beethoven, Berlioz and Wagner; d'I. also wrote his op. 1 and 2, and contemplated an opera on V. Hugo's Les Burgraves. During the Franco-Prussian war he served in the Garde Mobile, and wrote his experiences in Histoire du 105e bataillon . . . en l'année 1870–71 (1872). He now began to study comp. with César Franck, continuing until 1880; when the latter was app. prof. of organ at the Cons. (1873), he joined the class, winning a second accessit in 1874 and the first the following year. On his first visit to Germany in 1873 he met Liszt and Wagner, and was introduced to Brahms as the bearer of the score of Franck's Rédemption with the composer's compliments. In 1876 he heard the first performances of the Ring dramas at Bayreuth, and for several years thereafter made regular trips to Munich to hear all the works of Wagner; also attended the première of Parsifal in 1882. From 1872–6, organist at St.-Leu; 1873–8, chorusmaster and tympanist with the Colonne Orch.; for the Paris première of Lohengrin in 1887 he drilled the chorus and was Lamoureux's assistant. Together with Franck, St.-Saëns, Fauré, Castillon, Duparc and Chausson he founded in 1871 the 'Société Nationale de Musique,' was secretary until 1890, when, after Franck's death, he became president. In 1894 he founded with Borde and Guilmant the famous 'Schola Cantorum' (opened 1896), primarily as a school for Plain-Chant and the Palestrina style. Gradually the scope of instruction was enlarged so as to include all musical disciplines, and the institution has become one of the world's foremost music-schools. To-day (1916) it has a faculty of 60 instructors and an enrollment of 600 pupils. From the beginning d'I. not only was one of the directors, but also taught; after the death of Guilmant (1911) he became sole director. His fame as a composer began with the performance of Le Chant de la Cloche at a Lamoureux concert in Feb., 1886; the work itself had won the City of Paris Prize in the competition of the preceding year. As early as 1874 Pasdeloup had played the overture Piccolomini (later embodied as the second part in the Wallenstein trilogy), and in 1882 the 1-act opera Attendez-moi sous l'orme had been produced at the Opéra-Comique; but the prize-work attracted general attention, and d'I. was recognized as one of the most important of modern French masters. Although he never held an official position as cond., he has frequently, and with marked success, appeared in that capacity (chiefly upon invitation to direct his own works); thus he visited Spain in 1897, Russia in 1903 and 1907, and the U. S. in 1905, when he cond. the regular subscription concerts of Dec. 1 and 2 of the Boston Symph. Orch. In 1892 he was a member of the commission app. to revise the curriculum of the Conservatoire, and refused a proffered professorship of composition; but in 1912 accepted the appointment as prof. of the orchestra-class. Besides other duties, he has discharged, since 1899, those of inspector of musical instruction in Paris. Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1892, officer in 1912; member of many academies and artistic associations (in Belgium, Holland, Spain, Italy, Sweden, etc.).

Both as teacher and creative artist d'I. continues the traditions of César Franck. After a period of development, in which the influence of German classic and romantic masters is traceable, he arrived at maturity about the year 1885. Although he has cultivated with success almost every form of composition, his special talent seems to be in the direction of the larger instrumental forms. Some French critics assign to him a position in French music analogous to that occupied by Brahms in German music as the conservator of classical form. Like the German master and his own teacher, Franck, d'I. fills the form with new and thoroughly individual content. His style rests upon the art of Bach and Beethoven; however, his profound study of Gregorian Chant and the early contrapuntal style adds an element of severity, and not rarely of complexity, that renders approach somewhat difficult, and has given rise to the charge that his music is lacking in emotional force. While occasionally rising to great emotional heights, it nevertheless remains true that his music appeals chiefly to the intellect.—For the edition of Rameau's complete works (ed. by Saint-Saëns and Malherbe) d'I. revised Dardanus, Hippolyte et Aricie and Zaïs; also ed. Monteverde's Orfeo and Coronazione di Poppea; he has made pf.-arrangements of orchestral works by Benoît, Chausson, Castillon, Duparc. His numerous articles in various journals (French, Engl. and Amer.) are remarkable for critical acumen and literary finish; he is the author of Cours de Composition musicale (2 vols., 1903, '09); César Franck (1906; in 'Les Maîtres de la Musique'); Beethoven: Biographie critique (1911; Engl. transl. by Th. Baker, Boston, 1913).—

Inten, Ferdinand von, noted pianist and teacher; b. Leipzig, Feb. 23, 1848. From 1862–6 he studied at the Leipzig Cons. with Moscheles, Plaidy, Hauptmann, E. Fr. Richter and Reinecke, winning the Helbig prize for comp. in 1864; from 1866–8 he toured Germany, and then came to New York, where he settled permanently. He made his American début on Dec. 12, 1868, playing Beethoven's concerto in G at one of Th. Thomas' Symphony Concerts in Steinway Hall. In spite of striking success the career of a soloist had little allurement for him, his predilection being in the direction of chamber-music. His chamber-music concerts, in which Th. Thomas and Dr. L. Damrosch assisted frequently, soon were famous, and contributed largely toward the appreciation of a form of music little cultivated and less understood at that time. In 1876–7 he visited Germany again, and there had the distinction of playing the first public performance of Liszt's B m. sonata at the Cons. concert in Leipzig. As a teacher he has also achieved success; among his pupils are Frank and Walter Damrosch. A Isaak [ē'zahk], Heinrich (or Isaac, Izak, Yzac, Ysack; in Italy, Arrigo Tedesco [Henry the German]; Low Lat. Arrighus), an eminent contrapuntist, probably of German origin; b. c. 1450; d. Florence, 1517. From circa 1480–92 he was in the service of Lorenzo de' Medici, surnamed the 'Magnificent,' in the capacities of organist, maestro di cappella, and of teacher to Lorenzo's children. He afterwards spent several years in Rome, and finally was called to the court of Maximilian I, at Vienna, as 'Symphonista regis'; from 1514 until his death he lived in Florence. He is one of the most important composers of the period. A notable peculiarity of his works is the frequent appearance of the melody in the soprano, at that time a comparatively unusual device.—Works: 23 Masses a 4–6 (of which 10 were publ. between 1506–39); those in MS. are in the libraries at Vienna (8), Munich (4), and Brussels (1). Motets and Psalms by I. were printed in some 40 collections from 1501–64 (cf. Eitner, 'Bibliographie der Musiksammelwerke'; Berlin, 1877). His part-songs are agreeable to modern ears, and remarkable for the clearness and ease of the part-writing; one of the most beautiful of German chorals, Nun ruhen alle Wälder, is sung to the melody of I.'s Inspruk, ich muss dich lassen. He also wrote introits, Graduals, and the like; and a 'sacred drama,' S. Giovanni e S. Paolo. A voluminous collection of motets, Chorale Constantinum, was ed. by his pupil, Ludwig Senfl, in 1550 (3 parts). Part 1 was republ. in 'Dkm. der Tonk. in Österreich (vols. v, 1, and xvi, 1). I.'s secular works were republished in vol. xiv, 1.—See Q.-Lex.

Isouard [ē-zoo-ahr'], Niccolò, called Niccolò de Malte because b. at Malta, Dec. 6, 1775; d. Paris, March 23, 1818. Against the wish of his father, who desired him to enter the banking business, he studied music at Palermo with Amendola, and at Naples with Sala and Guglielmi. In 1795 I., under the pen-name 'Niccolò,' brought out his first opera, L'avviso ai maritati, at Leghorn, with slight success; Artaserse (Florence, 1795) was better received, and had the practical effect that he was recalled to Malta as organist of the church of St. John of Jerusalem, and later became m. di capp. to the Knights. On the suppression of the order by the French, I. brought out several Italian operas in the temporary theatre at Malta; in 1799 he went to Paris, where his career as a dramatic composer fairly began. In 16 years he produced 33 French operas and operettas, the way to success being smoothed by the friendship and coöperation of R. Kreutzer.

Le Tonnelier (1799), Le petit Page (1800), Flaminius à Corinthe (1801), La Statue, ou la femme avare (1802), Michel Ange (1802), Les Confidences (1803), Le Baiser et la quittance (1803), Le Médecin turc (1803), l'Intrigue aux fenêtres (1805), Le Déjeuner de garçons (1805), La Ruse inutile (1805), Léonce (1805), La Prise de Passaw (1806), Idala (1806), Les Rendez-vous bourgeois (1807), Les Créanciers (1807), Un Jour à Paris (1808), Cimarosa (1808), l'Intrigue au sérail (1809), Cendrillon (1810), La Victime des arts (1811), La Fête du village (1811), Le Billet de loterie (1811), Le Magicien sans magie (1811), Lulli et Quinault (1812), Le Prince de Catane (1813), Le Français à Venise (1813), Le Siège de Mézières (1814), Joconde (1814), Jeannot et Colin (1814), Les deux maris (1816), and l'Une pour l'autre (1816). Aladin, ou la lampe merveilleuse (posth., finished by Benincori), was given in 1822.

Of these, Cendrillon, Joconde, and Jeannot et Colin, were the best; the improvement noted in his later works was due in part to keen rivalry with Boieldieu; the latter was finally elected in 1817 to succeed Méhul in the Academy, and I., who had aspired to the chair, was so mortified by his failure that he abandoned work, plunged into dissipation, and died next year.—His music combines simplicity with finish of style and suave melody; he was fortunate in his libretti, which, like his scores, never descend to vulgarity. He was an excellent musician, and possessed fine dramatic taste; but he was not particularly original.—While in Malta, he also wrote numerous masses, cantatas, motets, psalms, etc.—Cf. E. Wahl, N. I. (Munich, 1911).—See Q.-Lex.

Jahn [yahn], Otto, learned musicographer and art-critic; b. Kiel, June 16, 1813; d. Göttingen, Sept. 9, 1869. After study at Kiel, Leipzig, and Berlin, he travelled in France and Italy 1836–9, then qualifying at Kiel as a lecturer on philology; in 1842 he became prof. extraordinary of archæology at Greifswald, and full prof. in 1845; undertook the directorship of the archæol. museum at Leipzig in 1847, was dismissed in 1851 for political reasons, and in 1855 was app. director of the art-museum, and prof. of archæology, at Bonn Univ. In 1867 he was called to Berlin, but before he could enter upon his duties his health broke down, and he died after a lingering illness.—As a writer on music his magnum opus is the standard biography of W. A. Mozart (1856–9, 4 vols.; 2d ed. 1867, 2 vols.; 3d ed. 1889; 4th ed., revised by Dr. H. Deiters, 1905–7; English transl. by P. Townsend, London, 3 vols., 1882). This was the first musical biography written according to the 'comparative' critical method; it reviews the state of music during the period immediately preceding Mozart, and has become a model for subsequent mus. biographers and historiographers. Other writings on music are Über Mendelssohn's Paulus ('Grenzbote,' 1842), and numerous essays, publ. 1866 in his Gesammelte Auf- sätze über Musik, on Wagner, Berlioz, on the Lower Rhine Music Festivals of 1855–6, on Breitkopf & Härtel's complete ed. of Beethoven, etc. It had been his intention to write a Beethoven biography; but under his hand the collected materials first shaped themselves to a Life of Mozart, and Thayer utilized the accumulated data for his 'Beethoven,' as Pohl used J.'s notes in his 'Haydn.'—As a 'practical' musician, J. publ. 32 songs, in 4 books, and a vol. of 4-part songs for mixed voices. His critical edition, in vocal score, of Beethoven's Fidelio, is esteemed.—Cf. J. Vahlen, O. J. (1870); H. Deiters, O. J. (in 'Allg. M.-Ztg.,' 1870); E. Petersen, *O. He founded a singing-society in 1845, and was its conductor until 1870; in 1849 he received the title of 'Royal Music-Director,' and that of 'Professor' in 1870; in 1881 he was app. teacher of rhetoric at Scharwenka's Cons. An enthusiast in all things pertaining to Weber, he made a unique collection of Weberiana (all W.'s compositions in the first and in all subsequent editions; 300 autograph letters and documents; many mus. autographs, as the sketches for Euryanthe, the Mass in E♭, the Aufforderung zum Tanz, Leyer und Schwert, etc.; and all obtainable published essays and articles on Weber; etc.), purchased in 1883 for the Royal Library, Berlin. His own work, C. M. von Weber in seinen Werken (1871), is the most trustworthy treatise on the composer's works, containing a thematic catalogue chronologically arranged, with critical notes; it was followed in 1873 by C. M. von Weber, a sketch of W.'s life. J.'s original compositions include a pf.-trio, op. 10; a Grand Sonata for pf. and vln., op. 32; other pf.-music; and over 150 works for one or more voices (e. g., the Schottische Lieder.)

Jan [yăhn], Karl von, b. Schweinfurt, May 22, 1836; d. Adelboden, Switzerland, Sept. 3, 1899; took the degree of Dr. phil. at Berlin, 1859, with the thesis De fidibus Græcorum; taught at the 'Graues Kloster' under Bellermann, and then at Landsberg until 1875, where he went to Saargemünd, and thence (1883) to the Lyceum at Strassburg. He publ. several musico-historical essays: Über die altgriechischen Tonarten (1878), and the Diaulos (1881; both in the 'Allg. mus. Zeitung'); in art. Citharodik in the 'Halle Encyclopædia,' on the cithara and lyre; an analysis of Bacchius's Eisagoge (1891, 'Programm' of Strassburg Lyceum); on the metrics of Bacchius (Rhenish 'Museum für Philologie,' vol. 46); on the Hymnen des Dionysos und Mesomedes (Fleckeisen's 'Jahrb. der Philologie,' 1890); on the Harmonie der Sphären ('Philologus,' vol. 52); on Rousseau als Musiker ('Preuss. Jahrb.,' vol. 56). An important work is his critical edition (superseding Meibom's) of the Greek writers on music: Musici scriptores græci: Aristoteles, Euclides, Bacchius, [Cleonides], Nichomachus, Gaudentius, Alypius (1895), with an Appendix Melodarium reliquiæ containing all the extant vocal music (this also in a separate edition, augmented and revised, 1899).

Jankó, Paul von, b. Totis, Hungary, June 2, 1856; studied at the Polytechnic, Vienna, and also at the Cons. (under Hans Schmitt, Krenn, and Bruckner); then (1881–2) at Berlin Univ. (mathematics), and with Ehrlich (pf.); since 1892 living in Constantinople. His new keyboard, invented in 1882, is really a new departure in piano-mechanics, though standing in distant relationship to the older 'chromatic' keyboard advocated by the society 'Chroma.' It has six rows of keys in step-like succession; the arrangement of the two lowest rows (typical of the other two pairs) is as follows: the capitals representing white keys, and the small letters black ones. The 3d and 4th rows, and the 5th and 6th rows, are mere duplications of the 1st and 2d; and corresponding keys in the 1st, 3d, and 5th rows, and in the 2d, 4th, and 6th rows, are on one and the same key-lever, so that any note can be struck in three different places. The fingering of all diatonic scales is alike; chromatic scales are played by striking alternate keys in any two adjoining rows. The width of an octave on the ordinary keyboard corresponds exactly to that of a tenth on the Jankó keyboard, on which latter large hands can easily stretch a thirteenth. A full description of the keyboard was published in pamphlet-form by its inventor (1886), who has also produced it in numerous concerts. It has been taken up by several pianists (Wendling, Gisela Gulyas), and is taught in some music-schools (Leipzig Cons., Scharwenka Cons.). In 1905 a 'Jankó-Verein' was founded in Vienna.—Cf. R. Hausmann, Die J.-Klaviatur (1892); K. W. Marschner, Das J.-Klavier (1899); H. Schmitt, Zur Geschichte der J.-Klaviatur (in 'Wiener Rundschau,' 1889); R. Jaques-Dalcroze [zhăhk dăhl-krohz'], Émile, b. (of French parents) Vienna, July 6, 1865. In 1873 his parents moved to Geneva; having completed his course at the Univ. and also at the Cons. there, he went to Vienna for further study under R. Fuchs and A. Bruckner, and then to Paris, where he studied orchestration at the Cons. with Delibes; in 1892 he returned to Geneva as instr. of theory at the Cons. As he laid special stress on rhythm, he insisted on all his pupils' beating time with their hands, and this led him, step by step, to devise a series of movements affecting the entire body. Together with the French psychologist Édouard Claparide he worked out a special terminology and reduced his practice to a regular system, which he called 'Eurhythmics.' When his application to have his method introduced as a regular course at the Cons. was refused, he resigned, and in 1910 established his own school at Hellerau, near Dresden. Even before that time the new system had attracted wide attention, and the school flourished from the beginning; within three years branches were opened in France, Russia, Germany, England and the U. S. (Bryn Mawr Coll., New York and Chicago). Conditions resulting from the war brought about the closing of the school at Hellerau in 1915. Without question, the results obtained by J.-D. have contributed toward the recent extraordinary development of the ballet. Aside from his rhythmical innovations, he also commands respect as a composer of marked originality and fecundity of invention; many of his works show how thoroughly he is imbued with the spirit of Swiss folk-music.—Works: The operas Janie (Geneva, 1894); Sancho Pansa (ib., 1897); Onkel Dazumal (Cologne, 1905; as Le bonhomme Jadis, Paris, 1906); Les Jumeaux de Bergame (Brussels, 1908); an operetta, Respect pour nous (Geneva, 1898); a pantomime, Écho et Narcisse (Hellerau, 1912); Festival vaudois, for soli, ch. and orch.; La Veillée, for do.; Poème alpestre, for do.; 2 concertos for vln.; a string-quartet; pieces for piano (op. 8, 10, 44, 45, 46, 47, etc.); Suite for vcl. and piano (op. 9); Fantasia appassionata for vln. and piano (op. 53); several colls. of songs (Chansons romandes et enfantines, Chansons populaires et enfantines, Idylles et chansons, Volkskinderlieder, Tanzlieder für Kinder, Chansons religieuses, etc.). He has publ. a series of lectures on his system as l'Éducation par le rythme (1907) and a comprehensive Méthode J.-D. (5 parts, 1907–14); both have appeared in Ger. transl. by P. Boepple.—Cf. A. Seidl, Die Hellerauer Schulfeste und die Bildungsanstalt J.-D. (Ratisbon, 1912); K. Storck, É. J.-D. Seine Stellung und Aufgabe in unserer Zeit (Stuttgart, 1912); M. E. He lived in Hamburg from 1796–1802, and went thence via Berlin to Petrograd, winning fresh laurels. He died suddenly of apoplexy. His works (7 symphonies, 16 vln.-concertos, 6 string-quartets, 16 violin-duos, sonatas for vln. and bass, etc.) were in high favor as light and agreeable music.

In 1869 he was sent to the U. S. to collect data for a biography of Bruté de Remur, bishop of Vincennes (an uncle of Dom Guéranger), and died as he was about to return. J.'s interpretation of the Gregorian melodies according to the tonic accent has become the guiding principle in all the publications of the Benedictines of Solesmes. A complete list of J.'s writings is found in the Bibliographie des Bénédictins de la congrégation de France (1907).—Cf. Dom Guépin, Obituary notice in 'La Semaine religieuse de Rennes' (Sept. 16, 1871), and Souvenirs, in 'Boletin de Santo Domingo de Silos' (April, 1904; errors can be corrected by reference to Guépin's notice).

Marpurg for some 2 years, and composed diligently (overtures, a string-quartet, sonatas, and songs). The year 1856 he passed as a teacher in Russia, earning money to go to Schumann at Düsseldorf, whom he passionately admired, and with whom he corresponded; but Schumann died at the end of July. J. was Kapellm. of the Posen City Th. in 1857; went to Copenhagen in 1858 to spend 2 years with Gade; and in 1860 returned to Königsberg. From 1866–8 he taught advanced pupils at Tausig's school in Berlin, but was then compelled by ill health to retire to Dresden, in 1870 to Graz, and at last to Baden-Baden, where he died of consumption. In his vocal music J. is most nearly akin to Schumann, though of too deep emotional originality to be termed an imitator. He publ. about 160 songs for solo voice w. pf.:—Op. 1, 4, 5; op. 6 (Der Ungenannten, 6 love-songs after Geibel); op. 9, 11; op. 13 (6 Liebeslieder f. low voice); op. 14, 21–4; op. 30 (Dolorosa, 6 poems by Chamisso); op. 34, 35, 39; op. 40 (Gaudeamus, 12 songs f. bass); op. 41, 49, 50–3, 55, 57, 58, 61; and 3 sets without opus-number. Jo'achim, Amalie, née Weiss (recte Schneeweiss), highly accomplished concert-singer (contralto); b. Marburg, Styria, May 10, 1839; d. Berlin, Feb. 3, 1899. After her father's death she made her stage-début at Troppau in Sept., 1853; six months later she went to Hermannstadt, and in 1854 was eng. at the Kärnthnerthor Th., Vienna, here assuming the theatre-name of 'Weiss.' In 1862 she was called to the Royal Opera at Hanover; on May 30, 1863, she sang, as her farewell-rôle before her marriage to Joseph Joachim, the part of Fidelio (up to this time she had sung first and second soprano parts). Withdrawing from the stage, she now devoted herself to concert-singing, and became the representative Lied-singer of Germany; her interpretation of Schumann's songs was unrivalled.

Jo'achim, Joseph, one of the greatest masters of the violin; b. Kittsee, n. Presburg, June 28, 1831; d. Berlin, Aug. 15, 1907. He began the study of the violin at 5, his first master being the leader of the Pest opera-orch., Szervaczinski, with whom he first appeared in public, at the age of 7, in a duet. From 1841 he studied in the Vienna Cons. under Böhm, developing so rapidly that in 1843 he played in Leipzig at a concert given by Viardot-Garcia, and shortly after at the Gewandhaus, with genuine artistic success. He made Leipzig his home until 1849. It was the brilliant epoch of Schumann, Mendelssohn, and David; their influence was undoubtedly powerful in determining the young virtuoso to devote his exceptional gifts solely to the best in musical art. From Leipzig, too, he visited London, for the first time in 1844, again in 1847, and thereafter every few years, (later annually,) appearing at the Monday Popular Concerts, the Crystal Palace, etc. During the last years of his stay in Leipzig he frequently took David's place as leader of the Gewandhaus Orchestra. In 1849 he became Konzertmeister of the orch. at Weimar, where Liszt reigned supreme; two such antagonistic natures could hardly be expected to agree for long, and in 1854 J. accepted the position of conductor of concerts and solo violinist to the King of Hanover. In 1863 he married Amalie Weiss [see above]. In 1868 he was app. head of the newly established 'Hochschule für ausübende Tonkunst,' at Berlin, on the reorganization of which, some years later, J. was made artistic director of the department of stringed instruments. In 1895 he resumed the directorship. He was the life and soul of the institution, so much so that after David's death in 1873 Berlin usurped the place of Leipzig as the Mecca of all aspiring violinists. In 1877 he received the honorary degree of Mus. Doc. from Cambridge Univ.; German universities also bestowed degrees upon him, and he was a knight of numerous orders. His style of playing, nurtured on the best classic models, was remarkable for a masterful repose, dignity, breadth, and flawless finish which won for him the popular title of 'the king of violinists.' It was his aim to interpret only the best violin-literature in absolute accordance with the intentions of the respective composers; this quality of unmixed objectivity made him the foremost quartet-player of his time; as an exponent of classic soli he stood unrivalled in his peculiar domain, though the more brilliant and fiery playing of some other virtuosi may have been more effective under certain conditions. His quartet-party (Joachim, De Ahna, Wirth, and Hausmann) attained the ne plus ultra of excellence. His compositions are of a sombre, passionate cast; the finest is probably the Hungarian concerto, op. 11, in D m.; he wrote 2 others (op. 3, in G m., and the Variations in G, f. vln. and orch.). His op. 1 is an Andantino and Allegro scherzoso for vln. and pf.; op. 2, 3 Stücke for vln. (Romanze, Fantasiestück, Frühlingsfantasie); op. 4, overture to Hamlet; op. 5, 3 Stücke for vln. and pf. (Lindenrauschen, Abendglocken, Ballade); op. 6, 7, 8, overtures in MS.; op. 9, Hebrew Melodies, f. viola and pf.; op. 10, Vars. on an orig. theme, f. viola and pf.; op. 12, Notturno in A, f. vln. and small orch.; op. 13, overture Dem Andenken Kleists; op. 14, Szene der Marfa (from Schiller's Demetrius), f. contralto solo w. orch.; three cadenzas to Beethoven's violin-concerto; two Marches (in C and D), with Trios; a song, Ich hab' im Traum geweinet.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: A. João IV, King of Portugal; born Villa-Viçosa, Mar. 19, 1604; d. Lisbon, Nov. 6, 1656. Musical theorist and church-composer. His magnificent musical library was totally destroyed by the earthquake of 1755. Only 3 of his motets are still extant. He publ. Defensa de la musica moderna contra la errada opinion del obispo Cyrillo Franco (1649; anonymous), and Respuestas a las dudas que se puzieron a la missa 'Panis quem ego dabo' de Palestrina (1654); Italian translations were made of both. Two other works, left in MS., were never published. The catalogue of the destroyed library was published in facsimile by J. de Vasconcellos in 1873.

Jommel'li, Nicola, eminent opera-comp. of the Neapolitan school, and called 'the Italian Gluck'; b. Aversa, near Naples, Sept. 10, 1714; d. Naples, Aug. 25, 1774. Canon Mozzillo was his first teacher; at 16 he was admitted to the Cons. of San Onofrio, Naples, as a pupil of Durante, but was soon transferred by his father to the Cons. della Pietà de' Turchini, where Feo and Leo were his instructors in dramatic and sacred composition, and Prato and Mancini in singing. Ballets and minor vocal pieces were his first comps.; then followed dramatic cantatas, warmly praised by Leo. At 23 he produced his maiden opera, L'Errore amoroso (Naples, 1737), under the assumed name 'Valentino,' dreading popular disapproval; but its enthusiastic reception encouraged him to bring out a second, Odoardo (Naples, 1738), under his own name, likewise with flattering success. After several other fortunate dramatic ventures, he was called to Rome in 1740, where, under the patronage of the Cardinal the Duke of York, he brought out Il Ricimero (1740) and Astianatte (1741). Invited to Bologna to write an opera, he prod. Ezio (1741); here P. Martini, delighted with his genius, gave him valuable advice. At Venice (1741) his Merope aroused transports of enthusiasm, and the Council of Ten appointed him director of the Cons. dell'Ospedaletto; while here he wrote several notable sacred works. In 1745 he went to Vienna, forming a warm friendship with Metastasio, and profiting by his suggestions on dramatic expression and the like. Achille in Sciro and Didone (1745), and L'Amore in maschera (1746), were the fruit of his sojourn in Vienna; he was in Venice in 1745–6, and in 1746 returned to Naples, where his Eumene was produced the same year; in 1748 he brought out there with enormous success a revised version of his Ezio. The next year, at Rome, he prod. Artaserse, and, by the good offices of Cardinal Albani, was app. maestro at St. Peter's as Bencini's assistant. He remained in this position until 1754, writing much church-music; then resigned, to become Kapellm. to the Duke of Württemberg. For 15 years he lived alternately at Stuttgart and Ludwigsburg, in the enjoyment of liberal compensation, and of every facility for composition and for producing his works (17 opere serie, 3 opere buffe, and sacred music); under his direction the Ducal 'Kapelle' was famed as the finest in Europe. In 1769 the Stuttgart opera was disbanded, and J. again sought the field of his former triumphs, Naples; but the fickle Italian public had almost forgotten him, and the influence of the German style, reflected in his richer modulation and heavier instrumentation, was not at all to their taste; consequently, Armida abbandonata (1770), Demofoonte (1770), and Ifigenia in Tauride (1771), failed to win popular favor. These sad disappointments at the close of so brilliant a career so affected J.'s spirits as to bring on an apoplectic stroke in 1773. He recovered sufficiently to write a cantata on the birth of an heir to the crown of Naples, and a Miserere (considered his masterpiece) for two soprani with orch., to Italian words. He also received a commission from the King of Portugal to write 2 operas and a cantata; but died shortly after completing the Miserere.

Jommelli belongs to the period of Aless. Scarlatti, Leo, Pergolesi, and L. Vinci, and perhaps surpasses them in naturalness of dramatic expression in many arias and scenas; he renounced, for instance, the da capo form of the aria fixed by Scarlatti, and imbued his later dramatic works with something of the German spirit in orchestral variety and color. He wrote over 50 known operas and divertissements. His sacred music won equal fame; it includes 4 oratorios, several cantatas, and a great quantity of miscellaneous church-works; a Laudate w. 4 soprani soli and double choir, a Miserere and a Dixit a 8, an In convertendo w. 6 soli and double choir, a Magnificat w. echo, a Hymn to St. Peter f. double choir, and especially the Miserere f. 2 soprani, alluded to above, are the most celebrated.—The opera Fetonte (Stuttgart, 1769) is publ. in vols. 32–3 of 'Denkm. deutscher Tonkunst' (H. Abert).—Cf. P. Alfieri, Notizie biografiche di N. J. (1845); H. Abert, N. J. als Opernkomponist (Halle, 1908; contains also a biogr.).

Jonás [hoh-nähss'], Alberto, fine pianist; b. Madrid, June 8, 1868. Pupil of Olave and Mendizabal; also studied at the Cons. He entered Brussels Cons. at 18, studied there under Gevaert, and in 1888 won 1st prize for pf.-playing, and later 2 first prizes in harm. His pianistic début was at Brussels in 1880. In 1890 he passed 3 months at the Petrograd Cons. under Rubinstein's tuition. He played in Berlin for the first time in 1891; has made concert-tours in England, Holland, Belgium, France, Germany, Russia, Mexico, and the United States. From 1894–8 he was head of the pf.-department in the Univ. of Michigan School of Music, and from 1898–1904 dir. of a Cons. in Detroit, making also several tours of the U. S. From 1904–14 he lived in Berlin in great demand as a teacher (6 assistants). One of his pupils, Pepito Arriola (b. 1896) created a sensation in Europe and the U. S. (1908–9) by his astonishing precocity. In 1914 J. settled in New York as a teacher. He began composing as a mere child; several comps. f. pf. have been publ.; op. 10, Fantasie-Stücke; op. 12, Northern Dances; op. 14, Toccata in A; op. 15, Concert-Mazurka in G; Valse in C♯ m.; etc. His transl. into Spanish of Gevaert's Instrumentation appeared in 1903 (Paris).

Jonas [zhoh-näh'], Émile, b. Paris, March 5, 1827; d. St.-Germain-en-Laye, May 21, 1905. Entering the Cons. in 1841, he took first prize in harmony in Lecouppey's class (1847), and the 2d Grand prix de Rome in Carafa's class (1848, with the cantata Antonio). Two overtures were played in the Cons., 1851, 1852; but he found his true vocation in the composition of comic operettas à la Offenbach, making his début with Le Duel de Benjamin (Bouffes-Parisiens, 1855), followed by a score of others (La Parade, 1856; Le Roi boit, and Les petits Prodiges, 1857; Job et son chien, 1863; Avant la noce, 1865; Deux Arlequins, 1865; Le Canard à trois becs, 1869; Javotte, 1871, later in London as Cinderella; Le premier baiser, 1883; etc.). From 1847–66 J. was prof. of solfeggio at the Cons., and from 1859–70 also took a harm.-class for students of military music. As mus. dir. of the Portuguese Synagogue he publ. a Receuil de chants hébraïques (1854).

Joncières [zhŏhn-s'yär'], Félix-Ludger-Victorin de, b. Paris, April 12, 1839; d. there Oct. 26, 1903. A student of painting under Picot, he renounced that art for music, and entered Elwart's class at the Paris Cons., but left it after the first public Wagner concert at Paris, in 1860, his enthusiasm for the great dramatist revolting at the pedantic strictures of Elwart. In 1868 he attended the first performance of Die Meistersinger at Munich. From 1871 he was the mus. critic of 'La Liberté,' and a contributor to other papers.—Works: The 3-act opera Sardanapale (Th.-Lyrique, 1867); 4-act opera, Le dernier jour de Pompéi (ibid., 1869); 4-act opera, Dimitri (ibid., 1876); 2-act opera, La Reine Berthe (Opéra, 1878); 4-act lyric drama, Le Chevalier Jean (Opéra-Comique, 1885); 3-act lyric drama, Lancelot du lac (received at the Opéra); music to Hamlet (1862); a symphonie-ode, La Mer; a Symphonie romantique; an orchestra Suite, Les Nubiennes; a Chinese theme for soli and orch., Li Tsin; an Aubade triomphale, a Sérénade hongroise, and a Marche slave for orch.; a concert-overture; a vln.-concerto; etc.—He is President of the 'Soc. des Compositeurs de musique'; chevalier of the Legion of Honor; and Officer of public instruction.

Josef'fy, Rafael, distinguished pianist and teacher; b. Hunfalu, Hungary, July 3, 1852; d. New York, June 25, 1915. At the age of 8 he began to study the piano with a local teacher at Miskolcz; continued in Budapest under Brauer, the teacher of St. Heller; in 1866 entered the Leipzig Cons., where his principal teacher was E. F. Wenzel, though he had some lessons from Moscheles. From 1868–70 he studied under Karl Tausig in Berlin, and the summers of 1870–'71 he spent with Liszt in Weimar; these last two artists exerted a powerful and lasting influence upon his pianistic style and artistic ideals. At his début in Berlin, 1870, his transcendent technic and the variety of his tonal coloring aroused general admiration; he played with enormous success in the principal European cities. His Amer. début took place at one of Dr. Damrosch's Symphony concerts in New York in 1879, and his brilliant playing won him instant favor, so that he settled definitely in New York. It was soon noticed by critical observers that his art was gaining in breadth of conception and poetic insight. As a mere virtuoso his reputation had been secure from the beginning, but gradually he convinced the public that he was a master-interpreter, whose technical powers were used only as a means toward the attainment of the noblest ideals. His catholicity of taste was remarkable. Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, Chopin, Liszt and Brahms, all were interpreted with equal mastery and equal enthusiasm. As for Chopin, none of the so-called 'specialists' has yet surpassed J.; and as for Brahms, the name of J. will never be forgotten as that of the earliest and one of the most influential apostles of that master in America. As a teacher also J. exerted a strong and lasting influence, both through his personal teaching and his masterly pedagogical works; while his authoritative edition of Chopin's Complete Works (15 vols., with critical and historical introductions by J. G. Huneker [G. Schirmer, N. Y.]), the fruit of years of unremitting labor, is a lasting monument to his sound musicianship. From 1888–1906 he was prof. of piano at the Natl. Cons. in New York. Besides the great Chopin edition, he edited studies by Czerny, Henselt, Moscheles, Schumann and Schlözer. His School of Advanced Piano-Playing (1902 [in Ger. as Meisterschule des Klavierspiels]) is one of the most valuable works of that kind. In his earlier years he published a number of original comps. for pf. (Die Mühle, Romance sans Paroles, Souvenir d'Amérique, Mazurka-Fantasie, Spinnlied, etc.) and arrangements of works by Schumann, Bach, Boccherini, Gluck, Delibes, etc.—Cf. the article Rafael Joseffy's Contribution to Piano Technic, by Edwin Hughes, in 'The Mus. Quarterly' for July, 1916.

After further study in Rome (1846–7) he returned to Upsala as cond. of the Philh. Soc.; became mus.-director at the Univ. in 1849, org. at the Cath. in 1864, and was made prof. in 1874. Halévy in Paris Cons., 1834–6, but had no taste for serious study, preferring to write dance-tunes, and left the Cons. to establish dance-concerts in the Jardin Turc, which were soon all the rage. On account of debts he fled to London in 1838; recruited a fine orchestra, gave promenade-concerts, and made tours through Britain and to America. He also founded a music-selling business for profitably disposing of his own popular dance-music; success encouraged him to more ambitious efforts, and he wrote an opera, Pietro il Grande, in 5 acts; the enormous expenses attending its production, in 1852, ruined him. To escape his creditors, he returned to Paris, where he was thrown into prison; he died in an insane asylum.

Kalk'brenner, Friedrich Wilhelm Michael, b. 1788 on a journey from Kassel to Berlin; d. Enghien-les-Bains, n. Paris, June 10, 1849. Pianist; taught by his father, then (1799) at Paris Cons. by L. Adam (pf.) and Catel (harm.), taking first prizes in 1801. From 1803 he studied for a while under Clementi and Albrechtsberger (cpt.) at Vienna; appeared as a concert-pianist at Berlin, Munich (1805), and Stuttgart, also in Paris again, with great success, in 1806. As a teacher, too, he was in great vogue. The years 1814–23 were spent in London; in 1818 he took up Logier's newly-invented Chiroplast, simplified it, and applied it practically. After a German tour in 1823 with the harpist Dizi, K. settled (1824) in Paris as a partner in the Pleyel piano-factory (the future Mme. Camille Pleyel was one of his pupils). He revisited Germany in 1833, and Belgium in 1836. K. was inordinately vain of the success of his method of teaching, which aimed at the independent development of the fingers and wrist (he was the father of modern octave-playing); he even invited Chopin to become his pupil in order to learn to play artistically. He likewise developed left-hand technique, and a proper management of the pedals. As a player, his technique was smooth and well-rounded, his fingers supple and of equal strength, and his tone full and rich; his style, while fluent and graceful, lacked emotional power. His numerous études (among them several for left-hand solo) are interesting and valuable.—Works: 4 pf.-concertos (the last, op. 125, f. 2 pfs.); pf.-septet f. strings and 2 horns; pf.-quintet w. clar., horn, bssn., and d.-bass; 2 pf.-sextets; pf.-quintet; 3 pf.-quartets; 7 pf.-trios; 15 sonatas; also rondos, fantaisies, variations, caprices, etc., of a light character; a Méthode pour apprendre le pianoforte à l'aide du guide-mains (op. 108; 1830); and a Traité d'harmonie du pianiste (1849).—Cf. A pupil of Maurer and Romer, and early developed musically (he was an organist at ten), he was destined for the church, and sent to the Strassburg Lutheran Seminary; but devoted his spare time to the study of instrs. and composition. At the age of 20 he became bandmaster; at 22 he gave up theology; and in 1835, after bringing out 4 operas—Gustav Wasa (1832), Der Tod Oscar's (1833), Der Sarazene (comic, 1834), and Die Königin der Sarmaten (1835)—was sent by the town council to Paris, to finish his studies under Berton and Reicha. The Univ. of Tübingen conferred on him the degree of Dr. phil. et mus. hon. causa; he was made a member of the Institut, of the 'Comité des Études' of the Cons., and of several foreign societies; and officer of the Legion of Honor. He was a frequent contributor to French and German mus. periodicals, and wrote for Schilling's 'Lexikon der Tonkunst,' besides laboring for many years on an 'Encyclopédie de la musique' of his own.—Compositions: Add to operas above, Béatrice (1839), La Maschera (in French; Paris, Op.-Com., 1841); Le dernier Roi de Juda, a biblical opera, considered his masterpiece (concert-performance at the Cons., 1844); and Les Nonnes de Robert le Diable (not perf.); also incid. music to Die Belagerung von Missolonghi (Strassburg, 1829). Equally characteristic of his erudition and his originality as a composer are the famous 'Livres-partitions,' which are vocal and instrumental symphony-cantatas preceded by valuable musico-historical essays on their several subjects. The first of these was Les Danses des morts; dissertations et recherches historiques, philosophiques, littéraires et musicales sur les divers monuments de ce genre qui existent tant en France qu'à l'étranger; acc. de la Danse macabre, grande ronde voc. et instr. (Paris, 1852; a large 4to vol. of 310

His dramatic scenes, numerous songs, and instrumental works (3 symphonies and 5 overtures f. full orch.; 10 serenades f. wind; grand sextet f. saxophones; etc.) are also imbued with an individuality happily blended of French and German elements.—Biographical: H. In 1692 the success of his pastoral, Ismene, at Brunswick, followed by a grand opera, Basilius (1693), encouraged him to go to Hamburg, then possessing the best operatic stage in Germany, in 1694. Of the 116 or more operas written during his 45 years' sojourn there, Mahmuth II (1696) was the first, and Circe (1734) was the last. He was the first German to employ popular subjects in opera; Störtebecker und Goedje Michel (1701), Die Leipziger Messe (1710), Der Hamburger Jahrmarkt (1725), and Die Hamburger Schlachtzeit (1725), however trivial and coarse they may be, are at least original in design and execution, and not mere copies of French and Italian models. Most of his subjects were mythological or historical. In melody, orchestration, and vigor of dramatic expression, he was easily the foremost German opera-composer of the day. He successfully undertook the management of the Hamburg opera, and in 1709 married into a Hamburg patrician family. From 1722–8 he resided in Copenhagen as conductor to the King; in 1728 he was app. canon and cantor of the Hamburg 'Katharinenkirche.' A second work, Miscellen (Leipzig, 1885), treating of impressions received in Bayreuth, 1879, created a stir by its bold criticism. During 1880 he lectured on music at Munich; in 1881–2 he made a pianistic tour with Aglaja Orgeni and R. Sahla to 80 towns in Hungary, Rumania, and North and South Germany; in 1883–4 he was chief Kapellm. of the German opera in Amsterdam; then served in a like capacity at Crefeld, and in 1886 married the concert-singer Lili Hoke; 1886–90, artistic director of the Styrian Musikverein at Graz, also conducting the symphony concerts and directing the provincial vocal and instrumental schools; 1890–2, 1st Kapellm. at the Hamburg opera; 1892–3, Hofkapellm. at Munich; since then living at Graz, wholly devoted to composition. K. is one of the best known among contemporary dramatic composers. His first opera, Urvasi, in 3 acts (Dresden, Feb. 20, 1886 [rewritten 1909]), was well received; the 3-act opera Heilmar, der Narr (Munich, March 8, 1892), was very successful; the third opera, Der Evangelimann, called a 'musikalisches Schauspiel,' in 2 acts (Court Opera, Berlin, May 4, 1895), has had tremendous success in Germany, and appeared up to 1900 on over 130 stages in Austria, Germany, Holland, Hungary, Croatia, Switzerland, England, etc. Then followed Don Quichote, a 'musical tragi-comedy' (Berlin, 1898); Knecht Rupprechts Werkstatt, a 'Märchenspiel' (Graz, 1907); Der Kuhreigen [Ranz des Vaches] (Vienna, 1911; Chicago and N.Y., 1913). A new opera, Testament, was completed in 1916. K. finished Ad. Jensen's opera Turandot, and edited Mozart's Titus. His original published comps. comprise about 90 songs; much light pf.-music; music to the melodrama (Romance) Die Brautfahrt; 3 Phantasiestücke for pf. and vln. (op. 7); pf.-trio in F m. (op. 13); string-quartet in B♭ m. His talent manifested itself at an early age and was carefully fostered by his father, under whose instruction the boy made such progress that at the age of 7 he was admitted to the Cons., where he st. under Auber and Hellmesberger, and in 1885 carried off the gold medal. He then ent. the Paris Cons., where he was a pupil of Massart (vl.) and Delibes (comp.); graduated in 1887 as winner of the Grand Prix (gold medal) over 40 competitors. In 1889 he made a very successful tour of the U. S. with Moriz Rosenthal. On his return he abandoned music for some years; st. medicine in Vienna, art in Rome and Paris, and then entered the Austrian army, serving as an officer in an Uhlan regiment. Because of irregular practice, his technical skill suffered, and he retired for a time. At his reappearance in Berlin (March, 1899) his playing created a sensation. Not only had he regained his former astounding virtuosity, but he had also developed into a great interpreter. On his second visit to the U. S. in 1900–1, when he appeared as soloist and in ensemble with Hofmann and Gérardy, he carried his audiences by storm; on his tour of England in the spring of 1901 he scored similar triumphs; since then he has visited every civilized country, and securely established his reputation as one of the supreme contemporary masters of his instrument; in 1904 the London Philh. Soc. honored him by awarding him the Beethoven gold medal. At the outbreak of the great war in 1914 he joined his former regiment, was wounded at Lemberg, and excused from further service. Fortunately his recovery was rapid and complete, so that at the end of the same year he resumed his artistic career in the U. S. His repertory includes almost everything of note written for the violin since the 17th cent. He is the owner of the fine Guarneri formerly used by Wilhelmj; recently he bought from Hills & Sons the famous 'Stradivari with the wonderful golden varnish.' He has publ. numerous arrangements of early and modern music; his reminiscences of the war were publ. as Four Weeks in the Trenches (Boston, 1915).

K. was joint author, with Rode and Baillot, of the great Violin-Method used in the Paris Cons.—Cf. H. Kling, R. K. (Brussels, 1898); J. Hardy, *R. K. After his first tour of Germany in 1903 he was pronounced the greatest double-bass virtuoso since Dragonetti; a second tour in 1906 was sensationally successful. In 1907 he established his own orchestra of 75 performers, with which he gave regular symphony-concerts in Petrograd and Moscow, proving himself a conductor of splendid ability, and meeting with striking success. Being a man of great wealth, he now conceived the idea of using his fine organization for the purpose of advancing musical culture in districts that had never had an opportunity of hearing first-class symphonic music. Accordingly, in the summer of 1909 he chartered a steamer, and made a four months' tour of the cities along the Volga with such gratifying artistic results that he made similar tours annually until the outbreak of the war. During the season of 1916–17 he visited the U. S. for the first time. He has written for his instrument a concerto in A m. and minor pieces (Chanson triste, Valse miniature, etc.).

Lalo, Édouard (-Victor-Antoine), distinguished French composer (of Spanish descent); b. Lille, Jan. 27, 1823; d. Paris, Apr. 22, 1892. Pupil of Baumann at the branch of the Paris Cons. in Lille; ent. the Paris Cons. in 1839, and st. vl. with Habeneck and comp. with Schulhoff and Crèvecœur; won second Prix de Rome in 1847; excellent player on the violin and viola, which latter he played in the Armingaud and Jacquard soirées. In 1848–9 he publ. his first songs (l'Adieu au Désert, l'Ombre de Dieu, Le Novice, Six romances populaires de Béranger) without attracting attention; five years later appeared some chamber-music, and its indifferent reception discouraged the composer to such an extent that for several years he did not write a note. His ambition, however, was stimulated again by his marriage (in 1865) to Mlle. Bernier de Maligny, a contralto singer and fine interpreter of his works. He wrote a 3-act opera, Fiesque, sent the score to the concours establ. in 1867 by the Th.-Lyrique and just missed the prizes, his work being ranked third; although later it was accepted, and was on the point of being produced, by the Grand Opéra and the Monnaie in Brussels, untoward circumstances intervened, and to this day the opera has never been produced. L. utilized parts of it in later works, especially in the 3-act pantomine Néron (1891), which was not publ., and the MS. score is now lost. In spite of the ill luck of his first opera, L. at once began a second dramatic work, Savonarola (text by A. Silvestre); but before he had proceeded very far he lost interest, and turned to orchestral music. In this field he achieved his first decided success with the Divertissement at the 'Concerts Populaires' (Dec. 8, 1872); he became famous after the sensational success of his first violin-concerto, op. 20, played by Sarasate at a Châtelet concert (Jan. 18, 1874); his Symphonie espagnole and Fantaisie norvégienne (for violin and orch.) enhanced his reputation, and in 1880 he was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honor. In 1875 he began work on his chief dramatic effort, Le Roi d'Ys (3 acts, text by E. Blau); three years later the original draft was finished, but he did not proceed with the orchestration because he became absorbed in other instrumental works. When, in 1886, he returned to the opera, he revised and largely rewrote it. On May 7, 1888, it was produced at the Opéra-Comique with enormous success, and has maintained itself in the répertoire ever since. (The Amer. première took place at New Orleans, Jan. 23, 1890.) One week later the Académie des Beaux-Arts awarded L. the Prix Monbinne, and on the last day of that year the composer was made Officer of the Legion of Honor. Among modern French composers L. occupies a conspicuous place. He is a master of exquisite instrumentation, and his music is distinguished for warmth, noble melody and piquant harmony.—Works: Besides the operas mentioned L. left the first act of La Jacquerie (4 acts, text by E. Blau and S. Arnaud; completed, and the entire work orchestrated, by A. Coquard; prod. at Monte Carlo, Mar. 9, 1895); the ballets Namouna (2 acts, Paris, 1882; very succ.) and Néron (see above). A choir-boy in the church of St.-Nicholas, Mons, it is said that he was thrice kidnapped on account of his beautiful voice. In 1532 he was taken by Ferdinand de Gonzaga, Viceroy of Sicily, to Milan and Sicily; from 1538 he attached himself for three years to the Marchese della Terza in Naples; spent 6 months, in 1541, at Rome with the Cardinal Archbishop of Florence, thereafter being appointed m. di capp. at San Giovanni in Laterano, retaining this position until 1548. His movements during the next 5 years are uncertain; it appears that he visited Mons, and thereafter England; in 1554 he settled in Antwerp, where he lived in the society of the most distinguished and learned men of noble family till called to Munich in 1557, together with other Belgians, by Duke Albert V of Bavaria, entering the court Kapelle, and assuming its conductorship in 1562, remaining there in this capacity until his death.—L. represents the culmination of the era of strict single counterpoint; in sacred music (masses, motets, etc.) or secular composition (madrigals, villanelles, Lieder, chansons) he shows equal clarity of harmony and fluency of progression and melodic invention, qualities which render his works still admirable to modern taste; contemporaries called him the 'Belgian Orpheus,' the 'Prince of Music,' etc. He wrote about 2,500 compositions; Prof. Adolf Sandberger and Fr. X. Haberl began in 1894 a complete edition for Breitkopf & Härtel of Leipzig, expected to fill 60 volumes, 20 of which have appeared. The same firm also publish several popular numbers separately. After teaching successfully in Munich, he founded (1856–7), with Faiszt, Stark, Brachmann, and Speidel, the Stuttgart Conservatory. It is possible that L.'s attainments, both as pianist and pedagogue, have been somewhat overrated; his Grosse Klavierschule, publ. in coöperation with Stark, has run through several editions (rev. by Max Pauer, 1904) and has been transl. into English, French, Italian, and Russian, but is hardly increasing in professional favor; neither is his Instructive Edition of classic pf. works a model in every respect; his edition of Clementi's Gradus ad Parnassum is far outclassed by Vogrich's. He brought out several operas, of which Le Rossignol, in one act (Opéra, 1816), remained on the repertory for a long time, although rather mediocre. 13 more operas, a Te Deum (1809), a Solemn Mass (1815), a mass with string-orch., and a coll. of romances, are also known.

Angot,* brought out in Brussels, Dec. 4, 1872, and in Paris, Feb. 21, 1873, where it was played uninterruptedly until April 8, 1874. It was closely followed by its rival in popularity, Giroflé-Girofla (1874). He produced over 40 operettas, comedy-operas, and especially comic operas (opéras bouffes), which, in finish of instrumentation and carefulness of writing, are superior, on the whole, to the productions of Offenbach and Hervé. L. was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honor in 1894. He publ., for piano, a ballet-pantomine, Les Fantoccini; 24 morceaux de genre, Les Miettes; and a Gavotte; also an Aubade; mélodies and chansons f. voice w. pf.; sacred songs f. female voices (e. g., La chapelle au couvent); and Rameau's Castor et Pollux in piano-score. She leaped into fame with her recital of Nov. 16, 1914, when she played a program consisting of Chopin's Sonata (op. 35) and all the études (op. 10 and 25). Her playing is characterized by masculine vigor, dashing brilliancy and great variety of tonal color; withal, her transcendent technic is too much in evidence, for she does not sufficiently subordinate her own personality to that of the composer.

Legouix [lŭ-gwē'], Isidore-Édouard, b. Paris, Apr. 1, 1834; pupil of Reber and Ambr. Thomas at the Cons.; has brought out 4 operas and about 10 operettas without marked popular success.

His 18 operas show a noteworthy advance over those of his predecessors in the orchestral support of the vocal parts, and he treats the recitative and the melodic phrase with greater freedom. He was one of the first to write for 2 violins and violoncello, and one of the most important composers of chamber-music before Corelli. Also a noted teacher; among his pupils were Gasparini, Lotti and Caldara.—Publ. Concerto di messe e salmi a 3–4 con violini (1654); Mottetti da 2–4 voci (1655); Mottetti a 5 voci (1660); Sacri e festivi concerti, messe e salmi a due cori (1657); Sentimenti devoti (2 e 3 voci, 1660; 2 vols.); Compiete con litanie ed antifona della Beata Vergine (a 5; 1662); Cantate e canzonette a voce sola (1674); Idee armoniche (a 2 and 3; 1678); Echi di riverenza (14 cantatas for solo voice; 1679); Mottetti sacri con voce sola con 3 strumenti (1692); Suonate per chiesa (1655); Suonate da chiesa e da camera a tre (1656); Una muta di suonate (1664); Suonate a 2 violini e violone (w. org. continuo; 1667); La Cetra (sonatas for 2–4 instrs.; 1673); Suonate a 2 violini e violoncello (1677); Suonate da chiesa e da camera (1693).—See Q.-Lex.

Lehár [lā'hahr], Franz, born Komorn (Komárom), Hungary, Apr. 30, 1870. He was first instructed in music by his father, L. Franz (1840–98), a military bandmaster; from 1882–8 he st. at the Prague Cons. under A. Bennewitz (vl.), J. Förster (theory). In 1885 Fibich became interested in the youth, and gave him lessons in comp., although L. continued his regular courses at the Cons. Two years later L. submitted two pf.-sonatas (G, D m.) to Dvořák, whose advice was to the effect that L. should devote himself entirely to composition. After leaving the Cons. L. accepted a position as first violinist in the theatre-orch. at Elberfeld, but as the duties were heavy and left him no time for composition, he left after a year; he then ent. his father's band (50th Infantry) at Vienna as asst.-cond.; from 1890–1902 he was cond. of various bands; in the spring of 1902 he became cond. at the Th. an der Wien, which position he resigned after the pronounced success of his Wiener Frauen there in Nov. of that year. Since then he has been living in Vienna, devoting himself entirely to comp. L. is deservedly one of the most popular composers of light opera; his music, like that of his famous predecessors, Strauss and Suppé, makes an instant appeal through its unaffected simplicity, piquant rhythm and beautiful melody; like theirs, the scores of L. are also well written and orchestrated. His greatest success is still Die lustige Witwe (The Merry Widow; Vienna, Dec. 30, 1905); in the U. S. alone it has had over 5,000 performances; in Vienna, Berlin, New York, Paris and London the numbers of perfs. exceeds 1,000 in each city; in Buenos Aires it was played simultaneously in five theatres and five languages (1907). Through this one work both composer and publisher have become millionaires. L. is Knight of the Order of Isabella (Spain), of the Sun and of the Lion (Persia), and Officer of Public Instruction (France).—Works: The opera Kukuška (Leipzig, 1896; rewritten as Tatjana, Brünn, 1905); and the operettas (all premières at Vienna) Wiener Frauen (1902; in Berlin as Der Klavierstimmer; rewritten as Der Schlüssel zum Paradiese, Leipzig, 1906), Der Rastelbinder (1902), Die Juxheirat (1904), Der Göttergatte (1904), Die lustige Witwe (1905), Peter und Paul reisen ins Schlaraffenland (1906), Mitislav, der Moderne (1907), Edelweiss und Rosenstock (priv.

perf., 1907), Der Mann mit den drei Frauen (1908), Das Fürstenkind (1909), Der Graf von Luxemburg (1909), Zigeunerliebe (1910), Eva (1911), Die ideale Gattin (1913), Endlich allein (1914), Der Sterngucker (1917). Besides these stage-works, L. has written Ungarische Fantasie f. vl. and small orch. (op. 45); Huldigungsouvertüre; Ein Märchen aus 1001 Nacht; Il Guado, symph. poem for orch. and pf.; Eine Vision, overture; a symph. poem, Fieber (1916); songs; and numerous marches and dances for orch. (90 op.-numbers).

Lehmann, George, violinist; b. New York, July 31, 1865. Pupil at Leipzig Cons., 1880–3, of Schradieck and Hermann (vln.), Lammers (harm.), and Jadassohn (cpt. and fugue). Also one season with Joachim at Berlin. Won the Helbig prize for playing, at the Gewandhaus, 1883, Joachim's Hungarian concerto. Travelled till 1893 as a soloist and with his quartet-party, the 'Lehmann Quartet'; 1886-9, leader of the Cleveland, Ohio, Symphony Orch. (now disbanded); 1889–92 in Europe; 1893–1907 living in New York as a soloist, teacher, editorial writer, and critic on the staff of 'Musical America'; since then in Berlin.— Has publ. True Principles of the Art of Violin-playing (New York, 1899), valuable for students and teachers.

Lehmann, Lilli, famous dramatic soprano; b. Würzburg, Nov. 24, 1848. Her mother, Marie Loew (1807–83), who had sung leading soprano rôles and had also appeared as a harp-virtuoso at the Kassel opera under Spohr, accepted in 1853 the position of harpist at the Natl. Th. in Prague, and there Lilli spent her girlhood. At the age of 6 she began the study of the piano with Cölestin Müller, an unsympathetic and mediocre teacher. After 6 years she had progressed so far that she was able to act as accompanist to her mother, who also was the only singing-teacher she ever had. She made her début on Oct. 20, 1865, in Prague as the First Page in Die Zauberflöte; she then sang in Danzig (1868), Leipzig (1869–70), and in 1870 became a member of the R. Opera in Berlin, where she soon established a reputation as a brilliant coloratura singer. The summer of 1875 she spent in Bayreuth, studying with Wagner the parts of Woglinde (Rheingold and Götterdämmerung), Helmwige and the Forest Bird, which rôles she created at the Festival of the following summer. She then returned to Berlin under a life-contract with the R. Opera, and was made 'Kammersängerin'; frequent leave of absence, although granted only for short periods at a time, enabled her to appear in star performances in the principal German cities, Stockholm (1878, '79) and London (1880, '84, '85). Illness prevented her from creating the part of the leader of the Flower-girls in Parsifal in 1882, after she had selected and trained the sixteen solo-singers. By that time she was recognized not only as a great coloratura-singer, but also as an artist of unusual versatility, having sung tragic and comic parts, from Wagner to Suppé. In 1884 she was obliged to refuse an offer for the first season of German opera at the M. O. H. because she could not obtain the necessary leave. When, with some difficulty, this had been granted the following year, she made her Amer. début at the M. O. H. on Nov. 25, 1885, as Carmen; five days later she made her first appearance as an interpreter of Wagner (Brünnhilde in Die Walküre) with overwhelming success; from that moment she was the idol of the public, and remained so throughout her engagement till 1889. In that time she sang all the Wagner rôles (excepting in Meistersinger and Rheingold), Norma, Sulamith, Aida, Valentine, Donna Anna, Fidelio, Euryanthe, etc., and created at the Amer. premières the rôles of Isolde (Dec. 1, 1886), and Brünnhilde (Siegfried, Nov. 9, 1887; Götterdämmerung, Jan. 25, 1888). During the season of 1891–2 she sang again at the M. O. H., under the management of Grau, appearing in Italian opera with the De Reszkés and Lassalle. When she returned to Berlin after her Amer. season of 1889, she found the doors of the German opera-houses closed to her because of breach of contract (she had overstayed her leave); it was then that she established her fame as an unsurpassed Lieder-singer. In 1891 the Emperor caused the ban to be lifted, and since then she has sung as star at the principal German opera-houses, and in Vienna and Paris. In 1896 she sang the three Brünnhildes at the Bayreuth Festival. Her great admiration for Mozart caused her to take an active part in the annual Mozart Festivals held at Salzburg, and since 1905 she has been the chief, and practically sole, manager. In 1909 she still sang Isolde in Vienna, the next year the First Lady in Die Zauberflöte and Donna Anna in Don Giovanni (Salzburg Fest.) and in 1914 appeared as soloist with the Berlin Philh. Soc.; while she has continued her Lieder-recitals without interruption to the present day (1916). Since 1890 she has been living in Grunewald, Berlin. Her operatic répertoire comprised 170 rôles in 114 operas (German, Italian and French), all actually sung on the stage; her concert-répertoire, all the standard oratorios and over 600 songs. On Feb. 24, 1888, she married the tenor Paul Kalisch in New York. Mme. L.'s place among the greatest mistresses of song that the world has ever seen is securely established. She possessed in the highest degree all the qualities of the supreme artist: a boundless capacity for work, a glorious voice, faultless technic, penetrating intelligence, a fiery temperament, always kept within the bounds of artistic moderation, plasticity of pose, grace of movement, queenly stage-presence; as for universality, she stands almost unrivalled, although in America she will be remembered chiefly as the high-priestess of Wagner; her interpretations of Isolde and Brünnhilde have set a standard by which all Metropolitan artists have been measured since. Her success as a teacher is attested by such pupils as Olive Fremstad, Geraldine Farrar, Melanie Kurt, Marion Weed, Florence Wickham, etc. She has publ. Meine Gesangskunst (1902; Engl. tr. by R. Aldrich, 1903; Fr. tr. by E. Nägeli, 1910), Studie zu Fidelio (1904), Mein Weg (1913, an autobiography; Engl. tr. by A. Seligmann, 1914); she transl. V. Maurel's Dix ans de carrière into Ger. as Zehn Jahre aus meinem Künstlerleben (1899).—Cf. J. H. Wagenmann, L. L.'s Geheimniss der Stimmbänder (Berlin, 1905); L. Andro, L. L. (ib., 1907).

Lenormand [lŭ-nor-mähn'], René, born Elbeuf, France, Aug. 6, 1846. He received his entire pf.-training from his mother, an excellent pianist and former pupil of Zimmerman. Although he wished to follow a musical career, his father compelled him in 1863 to take a position in a commercial house. But his musical ambitions could not be suppressed; his first attempts at composition finding favor with Berlioz, he went to Paris in 1868 to study comp. with B. Damcke, the intimate friend of Berlioz. His chief interest was centered in chamber-music, and particularly the Lied. He founded, and still is dir. of, a society, Le Lied en tous pays, the object of which is to promote in France the interest in the Lieder of foreign nations, and to spread in foreign countries a knowledge of French Lieder. For many years he was correspondent of the London 'Mus. Times'. L.'s reputation as a composer rests chiefly upon his songs (about 100), which are distinguished by excellent workmanship and poetic conception; in spite of his admiration for and profound study of the German Lieder, L.'s music is typically Gallic; a comprehensive study of these songs, from the earliest (publ. 1871) to the latest (1914), shows that the composer has constantly kept abreast of the evolution of French music of the last forty years.—Works: Op. 23, Adagio f. vl. and orch.; op. 31, Le Lahn de Mabed (on an old Arabic theme) f. vl. and orch.; op. 41, Le Voyage imaginaire, tableaux symph. f. orch. after P. His charmingly written works are interesting and valuable partly by reason of his intimate personal experience, partly from the enthusiastic admiration which he expresses and imparts. He wrote Beethoven et ses trois styles (2 vols. 1852–1865); Beethoven: eine Kunststudie (5 vols., 1855–60; vols. iii–v separately publ. as Kritischer Katalog der sämmtlichen Werke nebst Analysen derselben . . . [1860], and vol. i as Beethoven: eine Biographie [2d ed. 1879; repr., with additions by A. In 1713, he brought out a dramatic oratorio, Il trionfo della castità di Sant' Alessio, at the Cons. His first opera was Pisistrato (Naples, 1714); it was followed by nearly 60 others, La Contesa dell' Amore colla Virtù (Paris, 1744) being the last. Leoncaval'lo, Ruggiero, Italian dramatic composer, fine pianist, man of letters; b. Naples, Mar. 8, 1858. He attended the Naples Cons., where his teachers were B. Cesi (pf.), M. Ruta and L. Rossi (comp.), and at 16 made a pianistic tour. His first opera, Tommaso Chatterton, was begun in 1876, and was about to be produced in Bologna, in 1878, when the manager disappeared. In order to earn his living L. then began to teach, and to play in cafés; this life he continued many years, visiting Egypt, Greece, Turkey, Germany, Belgium, Holland, etc., In Paris he sojourned several years. Here an opera, Songe d'une nuit d'été, was privately performed, and many songs published. An enthusiastic admirer of Wagner's works, their study, and the master's personal encouragement, inspired him to write and set to music an 'historic play,' the trilogy Crepusculum (I. I Medici; II. Girolamo Savonarola; III. Cesare Borgia), depicting the Italian Renaissance. Basic historical researches for this work occupied 6 years. With text of the first part completed and the scenario of the entire work sketched, he returned in 1887 to Italy, and succeeded in interesting Ricordi in the work. A year later the score of I Medici was completed, but repeated delays in the production led to a quarrel between composer and publisher. L. then wrote for Sonzogno Pagliacci, which was produced with sensational success at the dal Verme in Milan (May 21, 1892), and immediately took possession of the operatic stages of the whole world. I Medici was brought out at La Scala in 1893, and proved a fiasco; and the same fate befell Chatterton at its first performance in Rome (1896). This ill success discouraged L. from continuing his ambitious trilogy. His next opera, La Bohème (Venice, 1897), scored considerable success, but had the misfortune of coming a year after Puccini's work, which by that time had achieved great popularity; Zaza (Milan, 1900) was fairly successful, while Der Roland von Berlin (Berlin, 1904), written by command of Emperor William, was a complete failure. In 1906 L. made a tour of the U. S. and Canada, conducting his Pagliacci and a new opera, La Jeunesse de Figaro, which latter was received so coldly that it was never staged in Europe. Maia and Malbruk were produced in Rome in 1910 within the same week; La Reginetta delle Rose simultaneously in Rome and Naples in 1912. In the fall of that year L. visited London to conduct the première of Gli Zingari; one year later he revisited the U. S., directing Zingari and Pagliacci in San Francisco. His last operas, Ave Maria and Gioffredo Mameli, were both brought out in Genoa in 1916 without making an impression. Besides these operas L. has written an operetta, Are you there? (London, 1913); a ballet, La Vita d'una Marionetta; a symph. poem, Serafita; a Hymne France-Italie (Paris, 1916); and songs. He is also the author of the libretti of his earlier works (including Roland), and wrote the book for Machado's Mario Wetter (1898). Despite his long list of failures he has the distinction, which he shares with Mascagni, of being the originator of the 'veristic' school of opera.

Pupil of his father, an eminent teacher in Vienna; then of Czerny (pf.) and Sechter (comp.). In his fifteenth year he began teaching; also attended the Univ. as a student of philosophy until its closure in 1848 (the revolutionary year); made highly successful professional tours 1842–8, and 1852, and then went to Petrograd, becoming a teacher in the Cons., giving many private lessons, playing, composing, and acting as conductor to the Grand Duchess Helen during Rubinstein's absences. Ill health compelled him to leave Russia in 1878; he then played in London, Holland, Germany, and Vienna; here he married (1880) his former pupil, Annette Essipov, and settled as a teacher. He still made occasional concert-tours, but his interest in teaching caused him to withdraw at the height of his powers from the concert-stage in 1886, appearing for the last time in Frankfort. After the phenomenal success of his pupil Paderewski (Vienna, 1887; London and New York, 1891) L. was regarded as the world's foremost piano-pedagogue, and pupils flocked to him from all quarters of the globe. He retained the full vigor of his mental faculties to the very end, and taught almost to last day of his life. The long list of his pupils includes the names of Gabrilowitsch, Mark Hambourg, A. Schnabel, Fanny Bloomfield Zeisler, Katherine Goodson, Ethel Leginska, etc. He was married four times, and, with the exception of his first wife (a singer, Anna Friedbourg), to his own pupils: Annette Essipov (1880–91), Dominirska Benislavska (1894–1908), Marie Rozbórska (1908). Le Sueur (or Lesueur) [lŭ sü-ör'], Jean-François, b. Drucat-Plessiel, n. Abbeville, France, Feb. 15, 1760; d. Paris, Oct. 6, 1837. At 7, choir-boy in the maîtrise at Abbeville; a few months later, in the cathedral at Amiens, where he remained 7 years. His college-course was broken off 2 years after by his acceptance of the post of maître de musique at Seez Cath.; in 6 months he became undermaster of music at the Saints-Innocents, Paris. Abbé Roze gave him slight aid in harmony; he was really self-taught as a composer. In turn maître de musique at Dijon and Le Mans, he was called to Paris in 1784 as maître de chapelle at the Innocents, recommended by Grétry and others. In the competition of 1786, L. won the post of m. de chap. at Notre-Dame, Paris; here he organized an orchestra for the chief church-festivals, and brought out masses, motets, services, etc., w. orch., quite transforming the character of the church-music, but attracting crowds by his novel and brilliant effects, in the nature of descriptive music (he was Berlioz's forerunner in France). His most bitter opponents (and they were many) dubbed his music 'l'Opéra des gueux' [Beggars' Opera]. In self-defence he publ. an Essai de musique sacrée ou musique motivée et méthodique, pour la fête de Noël, à la messe du jour (1787); to a violent anonymous attack he replied in an Exposé d'une musique unie, initiative, et particulière à chaque solennité . . . (1787). In the preface he avows his intent of making church-music 'dramatic and descriptive.' During his temporary absence, the music was reduced to the old footing; whereupon he retired to the country, and spent 4 happy years in composing; in 1793 he brought out a 3-act opera, La Caverne, which had a popular success, and was followed in 1794 by Paul et Virginie, and Télémaque (all at the Th. Feydeau). On the organization of the Cons. in 1795, L. was app. inspector, and a member of the Committee on Instruction; with Méhul, Langlé, Gossec and Catul he wrote the Principes élémentaires de la musique, and the Solfèges, used in the institution. L. was dismissed in 1802 on account of a violent altercation ensuing after the rejection, by the Opéra, of two of his operas for Semiramis, written by Catel. For two years he lived in poverty and suffering, when Napoleon, in 1804, raised him to the highest position attainable by a musician in Paris, by appointing him his maître de chapelle, succeeding Paisiello. His rejected opera, Les Bardes, was now produced with great applause and even La mort d'Adam, the other rejected work, came out in 1809, but met with a cool reception. At the Restoration, in 1814, he was made superintendent and composer to the chapelle du roi, holding these positions till 1830. From 1817 he also acted as prof. of composition in the Cons., and from 1806–24 was on the mus. jury for the Opéra. He was elected a member of the Institute in 1813; and other honors were showered upon him. L. wrote 3 other operas, which were received at the Grand Opéra, but never performed (Tyrtée, Artaxerse, Alexandre à Babylone); also 2 divertissements, l'Inauguration du temple de la Victoire (1807, with Persuis), and Le triomphe de Trajan (1807); several oratorios (Debora, Rachel, Ruth et Noémi, Ruth et Booz); a solemn mass f. 4 voices, ch. and orch.; a cantata, l'Ombre de Sacchini; a Christmas oratorio; 3 Te Deums; 2 Passions; a Stabat Mater; these, and some other works, were published; he left many more (over 30 masses) in MS. He also publ. a Notice sur la mélopée, la rythmopée, et les grands caractères de la musique ancienne (Paris, 1793); and a sketch of Paisiello (1816); besides numerous polemical pamphlets.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: Raoul-Rochette, *Notice historique sur la vie et les œuvres de J.-F. Lind, Jenny, famous soprano, called 'the Swedish Nightingale'; b. Stockholm, Oct. 6, 1820; d. at her villa, Wynd's Point, Malvern Wells, Nov. 2, 1887. Admitted to the school of singing connected with the Court Th., she studied under Berg and Lindblad, making her début in March, 1838, as Agathe in Der Freischütz, afterwards singing Euryanthe, Alice (Robert le Diable), and Giulia (La Vestale). Although eminently successful, she was not satisfied with the quality of her voice, and in June, 1841, went to Manuel Garcia in Paris, who gave her lessons for nine months. Meyerbeer, on hearing her then, predicted a brilliant future. Though she sang at the Opéra in 1842, she was not engaged. In 1844 she went to Berlin, studied German, and sang the rôle of Vielka, in Meyerbeer's Feldlager in Schlesien, with great applause. Then began a triumphal progress through Hamburg, Cologne, and Koblenz (April, 1845), and via Copenhagen to her native city; sang in the Leipzig Gewandhaus Dec. 6, 1845, was engaged for the Vienna Opera, and appeared there Apr. 18, 1846. Her London début, put off by all sorts of excuses and advertised in every way in order to inflame public curiosity, was on May 4, 1847, at H. M.'s Th., as Alice in Robert. She leaped at once to the pinnacle of fame; "the town, sacred and profane, went mad about the Swedish nightingale," says Chorley. Her voice, with a compass from d^1-e^3, was 'a soprano of bright, thrilling, and remarkably sympathetic quality'; she was an unrivalled coloratura singer, wonderfully long-breathed, and showed exquisite taste in her cadenze, which she usually invented. Her impersonations of La Sonnambula, Lucia, Giulia (La Vestale), created a furore. Nevertheless, she left the operatic stage in 1849 (her last appearance was in Robert, May 18), to become the chief ornament of the concert-stage, a position which she held undisputed until 1870. From 1850–2 she toured the United States, reaping a golden harvest ($130,000); of this sum she distributed $100,000 to various charitable institutions in Sweden. She married Otto Goldschmidt in Boston, Feb. 5, 1852; went by way of Holland to Dresden, where she remained a long time; and returned to London in 1856, frequently appearing in public. Goldschmidt conducted the 'Bach Choir' for a time, and she sang both at rehearsals and performances. Her final public appearance was at Düsseldorf in her husband's oratorio Ruth (Rhenish Mus. Fest., 1870). Her private life was as admirable as her public repute; her generosity was unbounded; her modesty and nobility of soul have been the theme of enthusiastic eulogy. A bust of Jenny Lind was unveiled in Westminster Abbey, Apr. 20, 1894.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: Anon., J. L., die schwedische Nachtigall (Hamburg, 1845; also in Swedish); A. J. Becher, *J. L. Liszt, Franz [Hungarian Ferencz], the creator of the art of orchestral pianoforte-playing, and of the symphonic poem, was born at Raiding, near Ödenburg, Hungary, Oct. 22, 1811; died at Bayreuth, July 31, 1886. His father, an excellent amateur, began his instruction on the piano at the age of six; progress was so rapid that at nine Franz played, at a public concert in Ödenburg, Ries's difficult E♭ concerto with so great artistic success that his father decided on further concerts at Presburg. After the second, several Hungarian counts offered to provide 600 florins annually, for 6 years, for the boy's musical education. The offer was joyfully accepted, and the family removed in 1821 to Vienna. Here Franz took piano-lessons from Czerny for 18 months, and studied theory with Salieri, composing under the latter's supervision a considerable number of short church-pieces. Beethoven, hearing of the talented boy, asked to see him; at their memorable meeting the delighted master embraced Liszt after the latter's execution (without notes and accompaniment) of his trio, op. 97. L.'s first public concerts in Vienna were given in 1823, with such flattering results that the father determined to take his son to the Paris Cons. On the way, concerts were given at Munich and Stuttgart. Franz passed his examinations admirably; but Cherubini, then Director of the Conservatoire, was opposed on principle to 'infant phenomena,' and refused him admission, using as an excuse a rule forbidding the entrance of foreigners. As a consequence, Franz took no more piano-lessons, developing his genius in his own way; but still studied composition, for a short time under Paër, but chiefly under Reicha, eagerly profiting by the latter's teachings, and bringing out a one-act operetta, Don Sancho, ou le Château de l'Amour, performed five times at the Acad. royale de Musique in 1825. (The score was believed to have been lost until Jean Chantavoine found it in 1911, and publ. an account of it in his Musiciens et Poètes [1912]). Already a well-known pianist, he now spent two years in concert-tours; his father died in 1827, and L. settled in Paris to support his mother and himself. He was in great demand as a teacher, and moved in the highest circles of letters and art; in aristocratic salons, which had always been open to 'le petit Litz,' homage was soon paid to the great artist. His impressionable spirit was strongly moved by the influences of the period; the romanticism of Chopin and Weber, St. Simonism, the revolutionary era of 1830; he even dreamt of entering the priesthood, but in the end a love of art conquered. Paganini's advent in 1831 inspired him to heretofore unheard-of feats in piano-technique and expression; the music of Berlioz ripened his conviction of the poetic possibilities of his art; he became one of the most ardent champions and potent promoters of realism in music. For the present, however, these ideas found public utterance only in his pianistic achievements. These were interrupted for a time by his liaison with the Countess d'Agoult (known as an authoress under the nom de plume of 'Daniel Stern'); with her he retired to Geneva (1835–9). Three children were born to them; Cosima, the younger of two daughters, became the wife of Richard Wagner. During these four years, L. twice emerged from retirement to vanquish his only serious pianistic rival, Thalberg (1836). Finally, in 1839, he set out on a triumphal progress through Europe, signalizing this step by generously assuming the responsibility for the completion of the Beethoven monument at Bonn, for which a large sum was still required, and subscriptions scanty. For the ensuing decade the world rang with the fame of the greatest pianist who has ever lived. In 1848 he accepted the position of court Kapellmeister at Weimar, with the understanding that he was to further, by all means at his command, the progress of modern musical art. An adherent of the New German School (free tonality, romantic realism, program-music), he extended generous aid to struggling brother-artists. When the exiled Wagner, in despair over the dumb score Lohengrin, sent it to Liszt, the answer came back that the work was preparing for its first performance (Weimar, Aug. 28, 1850). It was followed by Raff's König Alfred in 1851. Here Der fliegende Holländer and Tannhäuser were revived, like Schumann's Genoveva, and Berlioz's Benvenuto Cellini. Naturally, Weimar became a centre of attraction for artists of modern tendency, reinforced by a multitude of pupils of the great pianist. His relations with the countess Carolyne Sayn-Wittgenstein, who left her husband and took up her residence in the 'Altenburg', brought about momentous changes in L.'s artistic life. She confirmed him in his resolution to abandon the virtuoso-career and devote himself to composition in the larger forms. Up to to that time he had confined himself almost exclusively to works for pf. (in fact, the bulk of his original pf.-works and his brilliant transcriptions belong to this first period), the influence and importance of which upon the development of the modern pianoforte-style can scarcely be overestimated. From this period on he appeared as a pianist only at rare intervals, but he sent into the world a new orchestral conception,—the symphonic poem, in which he makes free and original use of the leading-motive, 'local color' of most varied hues, and all arts and devices of orchestration, to plastically follow and interpret the inner meaning of the given poem or 'program'. In 1859 he left Weimar, on account of the opposition displayed to the production of Cornelius' Barbier von Bagdad, and the consequent failure of that opera. Until 1870 he lived for the most part in Rome; in 1866 the Pope, Pius IX, conferred on him the dignity of Abbé. In 1870, being invited to conduct the Beethoven Festival at Weimar, cordial relations with the court were reëstablished; and thereafter L. spent some months of each summer at Weimar. In 1875 he was made president of the new Hungarian Academy of Music at Pest; and between Weimar, Pest and Rome the last years of his life were divided, a throng of pupils and admirers following him from place to place. His death at Bayreuth, in 1886, occurred in the midst of the Wagner Festival.

According to a will made in 1860 Liszt's belongings, including all MSS., passed into the possession of the Countess Carolyne Sayn-Wittgenstein. It is known that in the early eighties L. drew up another will remembering the friends of later years, but to this day the document has not been found. After the death of the countess, on March 7, 1887, everything was left to her daughter, Princess Marie Hohenlohe-Schillingsfürst. Immediately after L.'s death Grand-duke Karl Alexander of Weimar had suggested the idea of a foundation to honor the memory of the master. He himself donated the rooms which Liszt had occupied in the 'Hofgärtnerei.' Princess Hohenlohe turned over all treasures and MSS., and thus the 'Liszt-Museum' was founded.

Dr. Aloys Obrist was the first director; in 1910 he was succeeded by Peter Raabe. Princess H. also founded the 'Liszt-Stiftung' by placing with the 'Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein' as trustee the sum of 70,000 marks, the interest of which is awarded to talented composers and pianists. In 1905 the committee conceived the plan of publishing through Breitkopf & Härtel the master's complete original works, and such arrangements of his own and other composer's works as in the opinion of the publication committee (Peter Raabe, chairman) are of permanent value. The editors are E. d'Albert, F. Busoni, E. Reuss, A. Szendy, A. Stradal, F. von Weingartner, Dr. Ph. Wolfrum; F. Mottl and B. Stavenhagen were also active editors until their death. Eminent musicians in every part of the globe are assisting in various ways. The edition is estimated to contain 40 volumes; the first vol. appeared in Dec., 1907; the following vols. have been publ. so far (1916): Vols. i–vi, Symphonic Poems; vii–ix, the Dante and Faust symphonies; x–xii, minor orchl. works; xiii, works for pf. with orch.

As a pianist Liszt, the creator of the transcendental style of piano-playing, occupies a position absolutely unique. He never had a rival. This does not mean that his greatness was appreciated by his contemporaries even at the height of his triumphs as a virtuoso. When they called him the 'Paganini of the piano' they thought they had done him justice, for all that those good people could appreciate was his fabulous technic. That this was a mere means of expression employed solely for the purpose of recreating the masterpieces of a Beethoven, of revealing their deepest meaning, was a conception of the function and art of the interpreter entirely unknown to the audiences—and most musicians—of that time. With Paganini, the glorification of self, virtuosity for its own sake, was the sole object. Liszt regarded the interpreter as a high-priest, whose duty is the revelation of the composer's innermost soul. Gradually, and very slowly, this lofty conception came to be understood, until to-day virtuosity is presupposed as a matter of course, and the merit of an artist is judged by his interpretative ability. According to the unanimous testimony of the best musicians of the time L.'s playing defied description in words.

Also as a composer Liszt occupies a prominent place in the history of music. His ideals were the noblest, his intentions the grandest, his technical equipment the fullest; and had his powers of thematic invention been on the same high level, he would have attained a place among the supreme creators of music. Even so, his daring originality of conception created the 'Symphonic Poem.' No one had a deeper insight into, or a greater reverence for, the works of Beethoven and his predecessors, than Liszt; in fact, he was convinced that in the field of absolute music progress beyond Beethoven was impossible. Yet he was equally convinced that standing still in art meant spiritual stagnation; and if there was to be any progress, it could only be along new paths. Berlioz attempted to develop the symphony beyond Beethoven, but failed because he merely introduced tone-painting into Beethoven's form. Liszt saw the immense possibilities of Program-music, provided that for the new style of music a new and adequate form could be found. This form he did not construct a priori, but proceeded to the creation of the art-work itself. He drew his inspiration from the masterpieces of literature and the plastic arts, and whatever mood or general idea these evoked in him, he delineated in broad lines in his music, allowing the content to determine the form. Thus each of the symphonic poems is the musical expression of some broad idea. If Liszt's themes possessed that inherent, compelling power and spontaneity which characterize those of Wagner, he would invariably have realized his lofty intentions. The vitality of Liszt's form has been amply proved by recent works of other composers, especially Strauss's Tod und Verklärung and Till Eulenspiegel's lustige Streiche. For the caricatures of countless imitators the master is not responsible. One can hardly claim (as some enthusiasts have done) a place for Liszt by the side of Beethoven and Wagner; it is, however, absurd to go to the other extreme of denying him all creative power. Only genius of a high order could create the new pianoforte-style (both of composition and of playing) or the symphonic poem. The creation of either constitutes a valid claim to immortality.

Liszt, the artist and the man, is one of the grand figures in the history of music. Absolutely free from envy, generous, kindly, and liberal-minded, whole-souled in his devotion to art, superbly equipped as an interpreter of classic and romantic works alike, a composer of original conception and daring execution, a conductor of marvellous insight, a discoverer and promoter of talent, worshipped as teacher and friend by a host of disciples, reverenced and admired by his fellow-musicians, honored by institutions of learning and by potentates as no other artist before or since, his influence, spread by those whom he personally taught and swayed, will probably increase rather than diminish as time goes on.

Li'tolff, Henry Charles, b. London, Feb. 6, 1818; d. Paris, Aug. 6, 1891. A pupil of Moscheles, he played at 12 in public. An early marriage (at 17) forced him to seek a livelihood in Paris; unsuccessful there, he supported himself in Melun by teaching; and in 1840 attracted the attention of Paris by a brilliant concert. His reputation now grew rapidly, though the unhappy course of his private affairs led to a separation from his wife. He made tours, beginning in Belgium; from 1841–4 was conductor at Warsaw; toured Germany and Holland, visited London in 1846, and Vienna during the Revolution of 1848, in which he participated, but escaped to Brunswick. Here he married the widow of the music-publisher Meyer, changing the firm-name in 1851 to 'H. Litolff'; he was one of the pioneers in the publication of cheap editions (Collection Litolff). In 1860 he turned the business over to his adopted son, Theodor, and returned to Paris. For ten years the state of his health had prevented concert-giving; he devoted himself to composition, and brought out 8 operas and operettas in Paris, Baden-Baden, and Brussels, of which the operetta Héloïse et Abélard was the most successful. Of 4 operas, Die Braut vom Kynast (Brunswick, 1847) and Les Templiers (Brussels, 1886) were performed; Rodrigue de Tolède, and Le Roi Lear (finished 1890), have not been prod.—Other works: An oratorio, Ruth et Booz (1869); orchestral overtures: Robespierre, op. 55; Les Girondistes, op. 80; Les Guelfes, op. 99; Chant des Belges, op. 101; Szenen aus Goethe's Faust f. soli, ch. and orch., op. 103; the Eroica violin-concerto, op. 42; a Funeral March for Meyerbeer, op. 116; 5 Concerto-symphonies f. pf. w. orch., op. 15, 22, 45, 102, 123; 3 pf.-trios, op. 47, 56, 100; 3 duets f. pf. and vln. (with Léonard); 6 études de concert, f. pf.; Opuscules, op. 25; Invitation à la Tarentelle, op. 36; Nocturne, op. 62; Characteristic Pieces, op. 65; a Spinnlied; etc., all f. pf.—His music is characterized by striking and brilliant effects.—Cf. H. Berlioz, Les Musiciens et la Musique (Paris, 1878; in Ger. tr. in vol. ix of 'H. B.'s Literarische Werke,' Leipzig, 1903); P. Magnette, H. L. (Paris, 1914).

Also an oratorio, La Passione, at Turin; and songs.

Litvinne, Félia, dramatic soprano; b. in Russia, c. 1860. Pupil of Mme. Barth-Banderoli and Victor Maurel in Paris, where she made her début at the Th. des Italiens. After a season in America (1885–6, as Mlle. Litvinov) with Col. Mapleson's company, she sang for some years in Russia (Petrograd, Moscow), and then went to Paris, where she became a favorite, especially through her rendition of the great excerpts from Wagner's works, which Lamoureux was then introducing in his concerts. During the season of 1896–7, she was heard as Isolde and Brünnhilde at the M. O. H., but made little impression, coming after such interpreters as Lehmann, Klafsky, Materna and Nordica. Nevertheless, when Cortot in 1902 gave his Wagner performances at the Château d'Eau in Paris, both her singing and acting took the French audiences by storm, and she has remained a prime favorite, both as a member of the Th.-Lyrique de la Gaîté and of the Op.-Comique. She is a sister-in-law of the de Reszkés, and married to Dr. Emmanuel Depoux.

Logier [loh-zh'yā'], Johann Bernhard, b. Kassel, Feb. 9, 1777; d. Dublin, July 27, 1846. Finding piano-practice distasteful, he fled from home at the age of ten, and was taken to England by an Englishman enamoured of his flute-playing (L. was a most precocious pupil of Weidner). In 1805 he joined a regimental band as flutist, and accompanied it to Ireland, some years later becoming organist at Westport, where he perfected the invention of the 'chiroplast,' an apparatus for holding the hands in correct position during piano-practice. It was patented in 1814, and Logier travelled through the United Kingdom to introduce it. It obtained great vogue, and brought him fame and wealth. Stöpel was sent by the Prussian Government to examine and report on the chiroplast, and L. was invited to Berlin to introduce his system. He remained there 3 years, and then returned to Dublin (1826). This system, which soon spread over Great Britain and Germany, and was even adopted in the Paris Cons., was reinforced by L.'s original idea of the simultaneous practice of several pupils on different pianos, which became the most important part of this method of instruction. The system was not received without protest. L. published in 1816 a work entitled An Explanation and Description of the Royal Patent Chiroplast, or Hand-Director for Pianoforte, etc.; bitter attacks were met by An Authentic Account of the Examination of Pupils instructed on the New System of Musical Education, by J. B. Logier (1818), which was greeted by yet more violent diatribes, all serving as excellent advertisements of the invention. In The First Companion to the Royal Patent Chiroplast, L. explains his method of simultaneous teaching: he also publ. Logier's Practical Thorough-bass, and (in German) a System der Musikwissenschaft und der musikalischen Composition (Berlin, 1827). His compositions include a pf.-concerto; sonatas, etc., f. pf.; pf.-trios w. flute and 'cello; and a method for Buglehorn.—See Q.-Lex.

Logroscino [-shē'-], Nicola, b. Naples, c. 1700; d. there in 1763. Eminent dramatic composer, pupil of Durante. In 1747 he became first prof. of counterpoint at the Cons. dei Figliuoli dispersi in Palermo, but spent his last years in Naples, where he prod. over a score of operas, chiefly in opera-buffa style, in which he surpassed his predecessors Leo, Pergolesi, and Hasse, and introduced the (then) new and brilliant effect of the act-close in ensemble. His operas held the stage till Piccinni's star gained the ascendant. Among his works were Inganno per Inganno (1738), La Violante (1741), Il Governatore (1747), Tanto bene, tanto male, Il vecchio marito, La Furba burlata (1760; written with Piccinni), and his one opera seria, Giunio Bruto (1750).—Cf. H. Kretzschmar, Zwei Opern N. L.'s, in Peters' 'Jahrbuch' (1908).

Löh'leih, Georg Simon, b. Neustadt, n. Koburg, 1727; d. Danzig, Dec. 18, 1781. On account of his gigantic stature he was seized in his seventeenth year, while on a journey, and forced into the Prussian Guard; having passed through several campaigns, he was severely wounded in the battle of Kollin (1757), and discharged. He recovered completely, went to Jena in 1760, and there finished his musical education, becoming Musikdirektor; in 1763 he settled in Leipzig as a violinist, pianist and teacher; from 1779 he lived in Danzig as Konzertmeister. His Klavierschule (2 parts, 1765, '81) was immensely successful, passed through many editions, and was even revised by Czerny; a Violinschule (1774) met with almost equal success; but his numerous comps. are forgotten. He wrote a Singspiel, Zemaire und Azor (Leipzig, 1775); divertimenti for orch.; concertos for clavicembalo, sonatas, trios, quartets, etc.—See Q.-Lex.

Loh'mann, Peter, German poet; born Schwelm, Westphalia, Apr. 24, 1833; d. Leipzig, Jan. 10, 1907. From 1856 he lived in Leipzig, and wrote 1858–61 for the 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik.' His dramatic ideal was the art-work free from conventionalism, nationalism, religious conflict, or mythic influence—a universal drama appealing equally to all mankind; in music his principles coincide in great part with Wagner's polyphony. Several of his vocal dramas have been set to music: Die Rose vom Libanon, and Irene, by Joseph Huber; Frithjof by Goebel; Durch Dunkel zum Licht by Freudenberg; Valmoda and Frithjof by Dreszer; etc. These and other poems have been publ. in 4 vols. (3d ed. 1886). Other works are Über R. Schumanns Faustmusik (1860), and Über die dramatische Dichtung mit Musik (1861; 2d ed. 1864; 3d ed. as Das Ideal der Oper, 1886).

Fauré. His Amer. début in New York (Nov. 2, 1916) fully confirmed the favorable reports that had preceded him; his programs of the first season contained many novelties of contemporary French composers; his recitals with J. Thibaud proved him an ensemble-player of a very high order.

Lort'zing, (Gustav) Albert, an eminently popular opera-composer; b. Berlin, Oct. 23, 1801; d. there Jan. 21, 1851. His parents were actors; the boy had lessons for a time with Rungenhagen, but the wandering life led by the family cut them short. He himself took children's rôles on the stage, and had some training as an actor and singer; as an instrumental player, and in composition, he was almost wholly self-taught. In 1823 he married an actress, Regina Ahles (b. Dec. 5, 1800; d. June 13, 1854). In 1824 brought out a short opera, Ali Pascha von Janina, at Cologne; joined the company of the Court Th., Detmold, in 1826 as an actor, and in 1832 produced 2 vaudevilles, Der Pole und sein Kind and Scene aus Mozarts Leben, which were well received on several German stages. From 1833–44 he was engaged at the Leipzig Theatre as a tenor singer; here he launched Die beiden Schützen (Feb. 20, 1837; instantly popular), and on Dec. 22 of the same year Czar und Zimmermann (not appreciated at Leipzig, but warmly greeted at Berlin, and still a general favorite); Die Schatzkammer des Inka (not perf.), Das Fischerstechen (1839; a local skit, but a failure), Hans Sachs (1840), and Casanova (1841) were followed by his best work, Der Wildschütz (1842; only a moderate success at first). Promoted to the conductorship of the Leipzig opera in 1844, he resigned in a short time on account of differences with the management. Reduced to poverty, which the successes of his operas mitigated but transiently, he went from town to town, bringing out Undine at Hamburg (1845), Der Waffenschmied at Vienna (Th. an der Wien, 1846), Zum Grossadmiral at Leipzig (1847), and Die Rolandsknappen (Leipzig, 1848). The success of Der Waffenschmied led to an engagement as Kapellm. at the Th. an der Wien, but during the revolution of 1848 the institution failed, and L. again was without the means of subsistence. After a second brief appointment at Leipzig (1849), which again ended in a quarrel, he went to Berlin, and became Kapellm. of the new Friedrich Wilhelmstädtisches Th. in 1850, spending the last year of his life as a conductor of farces and similar trivialities. The sum of 15,000 Thaler (about $11,000) was raised by theatrical benefits for the support of his destitute family. In 1850 he still brought out an operetta, Die Opernprobe, and a farce, Die Berliner Grisette. He left two other dramatic works, Der Weihnachtsabend (not perf.), and a 3-act romantic opera Regina, oder die Marodeure (comp. 1848; carefully edited by Richard Kleinmichel, with text-revision by L'Arronge, it was prod. at the Royal Opera, Berlin, Mar. 21, 1899, with great applause). The delightful humor and never-failing flow of melody in L.'s operas make them fresh as ever, after the lapse of three-quarters of a century. He also wrote music to Benedix's drama Drei Edelsteine; an oratorio, Die Himmelfahrt Christi; overtures, songs, etc. —Bibliography: G. A. Düringer, A. L., sein Leben und Wirken (Leipzig, 1851); G. R. Kruse, A. L. (Berlin, 1899; the best biogr.); R. Bürner, A. L. in Detmold. . . (Detmold, 1900); C. A. Webster, *Pamphlet on A. Inst. for Church-music, succeeding Killitschgy there as pf.-teacher in 1851; 'Professor' in 1859. A pianist and teacher of deservedly high reputation, he published many elegant and effective salon-pieces for pf., also suites, sonatas, sonatinas, and the like; and a long series of excellent pf.-studies (Studies for Beginners, op. 65; for more advanced pupils, op. 66; for Advanced Students, op. 67; Melodious Studies, op. 38, 193, 194, 195, 196; La Vélocité, op. 136; Universal Studies, op. 185; Le Trille, op. 165; School of Octaves, op. 176; etc.). Lully (or Lulli) [lü-lē'], Jean-Baptiste de, the founder of French grand opera; b. Florence, Nov. 29, 1632; d. Paris, Mar. 22, 1687. He was taught the elements of music, and to play the violin and guitar, by a Franciscan monk. Though of noble family, his parents were poor, and made no difficulties when the Chevalier de Guise proposed to take their son, then 13, to France to amuse the leisure of Mlle. de Montpensier, 'la grande demoiselle.' Whether she tired of his music-making, and sent him down to the scullery, or whether he was put there at first, is uncertain; but one day, while he was edifying the kitchen with his violin, the Count de Nogent overheard him, and secured him the position due to his talents in the private band of Mlle. herself. But the mischievous boy set to music a satirical poem reflecting on the lady, who thereupon expelled him from her house. He contrived to obtain instruction on the harpsichord, and in composition, from Métru, Roberday, and Gigault, organists of St.-Nicolas-des-Champs; he also gained admission to the King's private orchestra, 'la grande bande,' rose fast in royal favor, and in 1652 was made head of this violin-corps of 24 violins; he soon organized a second corps, 'les petits violons,' of 16 instrs., which, under his leadership, became the finest orch. in France; L. himself had hardly a rival as a violinist. App. court composer in 1653, writing masques and ballets in which Louis XIV himself took part, Lully also, as 'M. Baptiste,' danced and acted in the court ballets and festival-plays, and made himself indispensable to the King, who preferred his music to all other. In 1672 he obtained letters patent for the establishment of an 'Académie royale de musique' (now the Grand Opéra), and a rival theatre was closed by the police by the King's express command [cf. art. Campra]. From this time dates L.'s real fame—that of creating French opera; writing to French texts a music which not only respected the genius of the language, but eschewed the purely musical redundancies (flowery ornamentation, undue extension and needless repetition of words and syllables, and the like, which delay the dramatic action) then in vogue in Italian opera. L. is, therefore, a reformer of tendencies similar to those of Gluck and Wagner, allowance being made for the period, and for the means at his disposal.—He now devoted himself heart and soul to his theatre, of which he became the director, stage-manager, conductor, composer, and even (when required) the machinist. A strong point in his favor was the genius of his librettist, Quinault, who followed the intentions of his imperious employer with rare understanding. His operas held the stage for nearly a century, until Gluck's grander creations overshadowed them. He developed the form of the overture; wrote recitatives of an easy and dramatically effective style, and arias distinguished for their fluent grace and beauty; his choruses were more dramatic, and he introduced the brasses into the orchestra; finally, his scenic arrangements eclipsed those of his predecessors. He was a man of vehement energy, haughty, arrogant, and irascible. Luther [lŏŏt'ter], Martin, b. Eisleben, Nov. 10, 1483, d. there Feb. 18, 1546. His reform of the church extended to the musical services, in which he took the deepest interest. After leaving the Wartburg, Mar. 22, 1522, his ideas took practical shape; his Formula missae (1523), and still more his new order for the German Mass, first sung in the Parish Church at Wittenberg on Christmas Day, 1524, were the initial steps. Kapellmeister Conrad Rupff, and cantor Johann Walther, ably seconded L. in these endeavors; the latter states that Luther invented choralе-tunes on the flute (he was an excellent flute-player), which tunes his coadjutors noted down. The hymn-tunes (chorales) ascribed with confidence to Luther are Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott, and Jesaia dem Propheten das geschah; 11 others are thought, with more or less probability, to be by him; though it has become the fashion to deny him all share in the composition of the hymns of the church he founded. His influence was, however, predominant in the establishment of its musical services; and he wrote (or arranged) the words of many chorales (Grove gives a list of 36).—Bibliography: A. J. Lyon, James, a Presbyterian clergyman who disputes with Francis Hopkinson the distinction of being the first Amer. composer; b. Newark, N. J., July 1, 1735; d. Machias, Me., Dec. 25, 1794. After graduation from Princeton in 1759 he lived in Philadelphia until 1765, when he accepted a pastorate in Nova Scotia, Me.; from 1771 till his death he preached the gospel in Machias. The 'N. Y. Mercury' of Oct. 1, 1759, speaks of an Ode comp. by J. L., a member of the graduating class of Princeton, and mentions its performance at the graduation-exercises on Sept. 26; but the music of this work, written in the same year that Hopkinson wrote his first songs, is lost. The first known comps. of L. are six psalm-tunes publ. by him in a coll. 'Urania' (Philadelphia, 1762); the list of works is completed by enumerating the settings of 2 poems of Watts, A Marriage Hymn and Friendship, and of Psalms 17 and 19. In a letter (Apr. 22, 1774), P. V. Fithian made the statement that L. was about to publish a new Book of Tunes, chiefly of his own composition, but the book never appeared, nor has a MS. of such tunes been found. Speaking of L.'s works O. G. Sonneck says: "Their study will induce no critic to call L. a composer of real merit or even a musician conversant with musical grammar. But his importance lies not in the sphere of esthetics; it lies rather in the sphere of retrospective history. He was a pioneer, and thereupon rests his lasting glory."—Cf. O. G. Sonneck, Francis Hopkinson and J. L.: Two Studies in Early Amer. Music (Washington, 1905).

Lyon & Healy, celebrated manufacturers of musical instruments. The firm was founded in October, 1864, by George Washburn Lyon (b. 1820) and Patrick Joseph Healy (b. Mar. 17, 1840; d. Chicago, April 3, 1905). They began originally as dealers in sheet-music, books, and the smaller musical instruments; in 1871 they took over the piano business of Smith & Dixon, and gradually began also to manufacture other instruments. After the retirement of Mr. Lyon in 1889, Mr. Healy became the sole head and general manager, and immediately proceeded to put into execution his long-cherished ideas for the expansion of the manufacturing department. A new, large factory was erected, which soon turned out annually 100,000 instruments; this, in 1914, was superseded by a still larger building. Among their instruments the L. & H. Harp, put on the market in 1889, has become especially famous; their collection of old violins rivals those of the world's most famous dealers. The present (1917) officers of the firm are R. B. MacDowell, Edward Alexander, b. New York, Dec. 18, 1861; d. there Jan. 23, 1908. Pupil there of J. Buitrago, P. Desvernine, and Teresa Carreño. Studied from 1876, at Paris Cons., under Marmontel (pf.) and Savard (theory). In 1878 he went to Germany, where he studied for a few months with Louis Ehlert in Wiesbaden, and then entered the Frankfort Cons. in 1879. Here he continued the pf. with Karl Heymann and comp. with Joachim Raff, both of whom quickly recognized their pupil's unusual talent and took a special interest in him. When Heymann resigned in 1881 he recommended M. as his successor, but for some reason the suggestion was disregarded by the authorities, and M. accepted a position at the Darmstadt Cons. The next year Raff introduced him to Liszt, who showed his appreciation of the compositions submitted by placing the Modern Suite (op. 10) upon the program of the annual concert of the Allgem. Musikverein, on which occasion M. himself played the work (July 11, 1882). Its favorable reception induced him to remain in Germany, settling in Wiesbaden as pianist and composer. In 1884 he paid a short visit to his native land, and married a former pupil, Miss Marion Nevins. In 1888, however, he returned permanently, taking up his residence in Boston. There the interpretation of his piano-works attracted the attention of Gericke, at that time the cond. of the Boston Symph. Orch., under whose direction he played his own new pf.-concerto in D m. on April 12, 1889. Under Gericke's immediate successors, Nikisch and Paur, all of M.'s orchestral works received their first hearing almost as soon as completed, and the fame of the new composer spread rapidly throughout the land. When in 1896 the department of music was created at Columbia University, the trustees unanimously chose M. as the first incumbent, a distinction due to 'the greatest musical genius America has produced.' The assumption of these new duties practically ended his pianistic career; he now devoted himself entirely to teaching and composition, and, as regards his creative activity, the years spent in New York were the most fruitful of his life. For two seasons (1897–9) he also was cond. of the Mendelssohn Glee Club. Unfortunately his health began to fail about the year 1902, and when a year's rest had wrought no improvement, he resigned his position in the spring of 1904. The physicians diagnosed the malady as a gradual disintegration of the brain-tissues, which in the fall of 1905 ended in insanity.

Unlike some other geniuses cut off in their prime, M. lived to enjoy in a large measure the recognition due to his talent; for this timely appreciation not a little credit is due to Teresa Carreño, who was the first artist (except the composer himself) to play in public a work of M. In a Chicago recital in 1883 she played the Second Suite (op. 14), which she also introduced to New York on Mar. 8, 1884. She likewise gave the first European performance of the pf.-concerto in D m. (op. 23) at a Gewandhaus concert in 1891; and included all his pf.-works one after the other in her regular répertoire. — Shortly after the composer's death a number of admirers organized the MacDowell Memorial Association and raised a fund of $50,000. Mrs. M. deeded to the Assoc. her husband's summer residence at Peterboro, N. H. At very moderate rates rooms were rented to young American composers who, during the summer months, sought inspiration in those beautiful surroundings, the last resting-place of America's most inspired composer. Soon the number of applicants could no longer be accommodated, and several cottages were built. During the summer of 1910 Mrs. M. arranged an elaborate pageant under the direction of Prof. G. P. Baker of Harvard, with appropriate music from the works of M., arranged and conducted by Chalmers Clifton. The success of the undertaking led to the establishment of an annual four-day festival in August, known as the Peterboro Festival.

Among American composers M. occupies easily the first place, because of his striking originality; he is, in fact, the first and (so far) only native-born musician who has developed an individual style so pronounced that in his mature works he can be confused with no other master. His musical personality is as distinct as that of Grieg or Schumann. Like them, M. also is preëminently a poet whose exquisite fancies find their happiest expression in the smaller forms. His most pronounced gift is a fertile invention, and his themes are generally short, always clearly defined, wonderfully expressive and logically developed. His sense of proportion, symmetry and artistic unity is well-nigh perfect; with unerring instinct he strikes and maintains a fundamental mood, carefully avoiding irrelevant or disturbing elements. There are no sudden, violent transitions, no baffling contrasts, no jarring discords, nothing that offends the esthetic sense; yet his harmonic scheme is bold within the limits of the beautiful, his rhythm varied and incisive, his melody invariably noble, his climaxes powerful and stirring. Directness, freshness and vitality constitute the perennial charm of M.'s music.—Bibliography. L. Gilman, E. M. A Study (New York, 1908); E. F. Page, E. M. His Work and Ideals (ib., 1910); J. During the ten years of his directorship he displayed extraordinary talent as an organizer, and the institution flourished as perhaps never before; it was famous throughout the world for the perfection of its ensemble. In the fall of 1907 he resigned and came to New York as principal cond. of the M. O. H., where he made his début Jan. 1, 1908, with a superb performance of Tristan und Isolde; specially noteworthy were also his revivals of Fidelio and Don Giovanni and the American premières of Smetana's Bartered Bride and Tchaikovsky's Pique Dame. In 1909 he was elected cond. of the N. Y. Philh. Soc., and, in order that he might carry out his plans for a complete reorganization, endowed with autocratic powers. Into this work he threw himself with all his tremendous energy, achieving magnificent results, but the effort cost him his life. Early in 1911 he broke down and returned to Vienna, where he died a few months later.—Among modern conductors M. was one of the most imposing figures. But his soaring ambition would not let him rest content with the universal tribute paid to his genius as an interpreter; he sought equal distinction as a creative artist. His conceptions are invariably on the grandest scale, and the means employed for the realization of his ideas correspondingly elaborate. Although M. designates his principal works as 'Symphonies,' they have really nothing in common with the established classical form, beyond the number of movements; and even the arrangement of these differs from the accepted scheme of fast and slow tempi. In spite of consummate mastery of all technical details, M. failed as a composer because of lack of individuality and limited inventive power; his music is purely eclectic. In every work occur passages of real and great beauty, but the effect of these is invariably impaired by long stretches of uninspired music. Two other factors militate against the effectiveness of M.'s works: Inordinate length and over-indulgence in sudden, violent contrasts.—Works: 9 Symphonies: I. D (1891); II. C m. (1895); III. D m. (1896); IV. G (1901); V. D m. (1904); VI. A m. (1906); VII. E m. (1908); VIII. E♭ (1910); IX. D (1912; posth.) M.'s sketches for a tenth symph. were elaborated by Franz Mikorey, and the work was prod. in Berlin (1913) as Symphonia Engadiana.—Das klagende Lied for soli, ch. and orch.; the song-cycles with orch. Kindertotenlieder (5 songs), Des Knaben Wunderhorn (12 songs), Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen (4 songs), Das Lied von der Erde (posth.; 3 songs for ten. and 3 for alto); several separate songs with orch.; 3 books of early songs (with pf.); a 'Märchenspiel,' Rübezahl (text by M.); fragments of an early opera, Die Argonauten. He also completed Weber's Die drei Pintos (1877; after the composer's sketches).—Bibliography. L. Schiedermair, G. M. (Leipzig, 1901); R. Specht, G. M. (Berlin, 1905; brief sketch, 39 pp.); P. Stefan, G. M.'s Erbe (Munich, 1908; a polemic against Weingartner [M.'s succ. in Vienna]); G. M. Ein Bild seiner Persönlichkeit in Widmungen (Munich, 1910); P. Stefan, *G. M. Malibran, Maria Felicità (née Garcia), b. Paris, Mar. 24, 1808; d. Manchester, Sept. 23, 1836. Daughter of Manuel Garcia, and a most eminent dramatic contralto. Taken to Naples at 3, at 5 she played a child's part in Paër's opera Agnese. Two years later she studied solfeggî with Panseron; from the age of 15, however, she was her father's pupil in singing. Her début at H. M.'s Th., London, June 7, 1825, as Rosine in the Barbiere, procured her engagement for the season. The family then voyaged to New York, where for two years she was the popular favorite, singing in Otello, Roméo, Don Giovanni, Tancredi, Cenerentola, and the 2 operas which her father wrote for her, L'Amante astuto and La Figlia dell'aria. Here she married the French merchant Malibran; he soon became bankrupt, and they separated. Returning to Paris, her immense success led to an engagement at a salary of 50,000 francs; after 1829 she sang every season at London; also appeared at Rome, Naples, Bologna, and Milan; at her last Naples engagement she received 80,000 francs for 40 nights, with 2½ benefits; at London, 1835, she had £2,775 for 24 nights. She married the violinist de Bériot in 1836, only a few months before her death, which was caused by overexertion in singing after a severe fall from her horse. As a singer and actress she exercised the fascination of a highly endowed personality over her audiences. Her voice was of extraordinary compass, but the medium register had several 'dead' tones. She was also a good pianist, and composed numerous nocturnes, romances, and chansonnettes, publ. in album-form as Dernières pensées, etc.—BIBLIOGRAPHY. Cenni biografici (Venice, 1835); G. In 1881 he joined D'Oyly Carte's company as a chorus-singer, where his fine voice attracted immediate attention, so that he was entrusted with the creation of the rôle of Private Willis in Sullivan's Iolanthe, in which he made a most successful début on Nov. 25, 1882 (Savoy Th., London); having sung in the provinces with the Carl Rosa company, he appeared in grand opera at Cov. Garden as Bertram in Robert le Diable (1890); in 1893 he was heard in the U. S. as soloist at the Seidl Concerts; 1894–6 he sang under A. Harris. The emphatic success of his South African tour (1896–7), when he sang in English, led him to form on his return the Moody-Manners Opera Co. for the production of grand opera in the vernacular: the principal soprano was his wife, Fanny Moody (q. v.), whom he had married in 1890. From modest beginnings with such works as Maritana, Marta, Faust, etc., produced at various provincial theatres, the company steadily increased in efficiency, so that in 1902 M. undertook his first London season, winning such generous applause that since then these performances in English have become a part of the musical life of the capital. Securing adequate translations of Wagner's music-dramas, these works were added one after another to the répertoire, and M. has the honor of having been the first to introduce those masterpieces to the provinces. To add to the value of his company as an educational institution, M. has at various times offered prizes for British composers, and brought out their works. In 1904 and 1906 he gave two operatic festivals at Sheffield, donating the entire profits to the fund for the foundation of a university there.

Ma'ra, Gertrud Elisabeth (née Schmeling), wonderful soprano, with the phenomenal compass g–e^3; b. Kassel, Feb. 23, 1749; d. Reval, Jan. 20, 1833. Daughter of a poor musician, and crippled by a fall in infancy, she took to the violin by instinct; she was trained by charitable aid, and taken as a prodigy (at 9) to Vienna, and thence to London, by her father. She was a natural singer, and was taught in London by Paradisi; her health also greatly improved, and she returned to Kassel hoping to be engaged for the court opera; failing here, J. A. Hiller engaged her at 600 Thaler per annum for the 'Grosses Concert' at Leipzig. She sang here from 1766–71, also appearing several times at the Dresden Opera with great success; and in 1771 obtained a life-engagement at the Berlin Court Opera, at 3,000 Thaler. The caprices of a vicious husband (the 'cellist Mara, whom she married in 1773), and the incredible tyranny of King Frederick II, rendered this period of the great singer's life wretched; in 1780 she fled to Vienna with her husband, and proceeded thence, armed with letters of recommendation from Marie Antoinette, to Paris, where the artistic rivalry between M. and the Todi set the town by the ears. From 1784–1802 she made London her abode, singing chiefly in concerts, and twice visited Italy; obtained a decree of separation from her husband in 1799; left London to make a long European tour, and settled in Moscow, but lost all her property in the conflagration of 1812. She taught singing in Reval, tempted Fortune once more, with ill success, in London, and died poor at the age of 84.—Bibliography. G. C. Grosheim, Das Leben der Künstlerin Mara (Kassel, 1823); Fr. Rochlitz, Für Freunde der Tonkunst (Leipzig, 1824–32; in vol. i); G. Bürkli, G. E. M. (Zurich, 1835); Autobiographie [ed. by Riesemann] in 'Allgem. mus. Zeitung' (Leipzig, 1875); A. Niggli, *G. placed herself under his instruction. When Frau von Mildenburg declined to study the rôle of Elektra for the Vienna première, de Reszké recommended his pupil to Weingartner, and accordingly she made her début with almost sensational success in that difficult part on Mar. 24, 1908; for the next two years she remained at the court opera as a regular member; when Weingartner resigned the directorship in 1910, she also left, and married him the following year; since then she has been the principal soprano where W. was cond., in Hamburg (1912–14), and in Darmstadt since 1914. In the early part of 1912, and also in 1913, she and her husband appeared with great applause in several performances of the Boston Opera Co., her Amer. début taking place at Boston as Tosca on Feb. 14, 1912. Although a good actress, she captivates rather through the charm and emotional quality of her voice, which has much of the fullness of the contralto quality. Her chief rôles are Elektra, Salome, Eva, Aida, Desdemona, Marguerite, Djamileh, etc.

Pupil of Lillo and Conti at the Royal Cons., Naples, 1850–4; his maiden-opera, Gentile da Varano (Turin, Teatro Nazionale, 1856), was extremely well received; La Demente (1857) less so; he lived in Rome 1860–3 as a singing-teacher, and, failing to bring out Il Paria, he went to Milan, and wrote his Giulietta e Romeo (text by M. (Boston, Jan. 10, 1912); subsequently he became one of the prime favorites of the Chicago Opera Co. Although his voice is neither sensuous nor robust, he obtains a wonderful finesse of vocal nuances, while his histrionic power of subtle characterization is equalled by but few singers. Marsch'ner, Heinrich (August), remarkable opera-composer; b. Zittau, Saxony, Aug. 16, 1795 [not 1796]; d. Hanover, Dec. 14, 1861. He had piano-lessons from his sixth year, and surpassed three successive teachers; also sang, until his voice broke, in a church choir at Bautzen, where he was taught by Bergt, the organist, while studying at the Gymnasium. He entered Leipzig Univ. in 1813 as a law-student; but his passion for music, and Rochlitz's advice, decided his vocation. Now a pupil of cantor Schicht, he began composing minor pieces; in 1817 he was invited to Vienna by Count Thaddäus von Amadée, and met Beethoven. Obtaining, through the court's aid, a place as music-teacher in Presburg, he wrote his first (1-act) opera, Der Kyffhäuserberg (Vienna, 1816); Saidor (3 acts; Presburg, 1819) and Heinrich IV. und d'Aubigné followed; the latter, brought out at Dresden, 1820, by Weber, caused him to invite M. thither, and 1821 found the latter in the Saxon capital, where, in 1823, he was made director of the German and Italian operas, jointly with Weber and Morlacchi. After Weber's death (1826), M. became Kapellm. of the Leipzig theatre, where he prod. Der Vampyr (1828) and Der Templer und die Jüdin (1829), the latter carrying his fame throughout Germany; in 1831 he was app. court Kapellm. at Hanover, and retained this post 28 years; his liberal opinions, freely expressed, caused his retirement on pension with the title 'Generalmusikdirektor', in 1859. In 1834 the Univ. of Leipzig made him Dr. phil. (hon. c.). In Hanover his greatest work, Hans Heiling, was written; it was first performed on May 24, 1833, at Berlin, with tumultuous applause; with Der Vampyr, and Templer und Jüdin, it is still on the repertory of most German theatres. In these romantic operas Marschner stands between Weber on the one hand, and Wagner on the other, though nearer to the former. His is one of the great names in the annals of German opera. His other dramatic works (Der Holzdieb, Dresden, 1825; Lucretia Danzig, 1826; Des Falkners Braut, Leipzig, 1832; Das Schloss am Ätna, Berlin, 1838; Der Bäbu, Hanover, 1837; Adolf von Nassau, Hanover, 1843; and Austin, Hanover, 1851) have disappeared from the stage. A posthumous opera, Hjarne der Sängerkönig, was prod. at Frankfort, 1863; also in 1883, at Munich, as König Hjarne und das Tyrfingschwert. He also wrote music to Kleist's Prinz Friedrich von Homburg, Hall's Ali Baba, Kind's Schön Ellen, Rodenberg's Waldmüllers Margaret, etc.; he publ. some 20 sets of songs, and 10 sets of 4-part male choruses (Zigeunerleben, and others, are very fine); his pf.-comps. were popular at the time, but, with his chamber-music, have fallen into undeserved complete neglect.—BIBLIOGRAPHY.—M. E. Wittmann, M. (Leipzig, 1897); G. Münzer, H. M. (Berlin, 1901); G. Fischer, Musik in Hannover (Hanover, 1902); H. Gaartz, Die Opern H. M.'s (Leipzig, 1912). M.'s letters to Ed. Devrient were publ. by J. Kürschner in 'Deutsche Rundschau' (1879).

Marti'ni [-tē'nē], Giambattista, best known as Padre Martini; b. Bologna, Apr. 24, 1706; d. there Oct. 3 (or 4), 1784. His mus. education was conducted by his father, a violinist; by Padre Predieri (clavichord and voice); and Riccieri (cpt.). In 1725 he became m. di capp. at the church of San Francesco, and took holy orders in 1729. In his eager study of mathematics and counterpoint he was seconded by Zanotti and Perti, m. di capp. at San Petronio; his masses and oratorios rendered him famous throughout Europe as a composer, and his renown as a learned theorist was still greater. Students of all nationalities sought his instruction (among them Gluck, Mozart, Grétry, Jommelli, Mattei), and recognized authorities in musical science and history submitted knotty questions to him for settlement. The greater part of his magnificent musical library went to the Liceo Musicale of Bologna; the rest to the Vienna Library. He was a member of the Accademia Filarmonica of Bologna; also of the Accad. Arcadica of Rome, in which his 'Arcadian' title was 'Aristosseno Anfioneo' (Aristoxenos Amphion). Of his compositions, in the style of the Roman school (of which he was a warm partisan), the following were publ.: Litaniae atque antiphoniae finales . . ., 1 a 4, with org. and instrs. (1734); 12 Sonate d'intavolatura per l'organo e cembalo (1742); 6 ditto (1747); Duetti da camera a diversi voci (1763). G. M.* (Bologna, 1784); id., Memorie storiche del P. G. B. M. (Naples, 1785); F. Parisini, Della vita e della opere del padre M. (Bologna, 1887); L. Busi, Il padre G. B. M. (vol. i, Bologna, 1891). M.'s voluminous correspondence was publ. by F. Parisini (Bologna, 1888).—See Q.-Lex.

Leaving the army, he became mus. dir. to the Prince of Condé, later to the Comte d'Artois. He purchased the reversion of the office of First Intendant of the king's music, a speculation brought to naught by the Revolution, which caused him to resign in haste his position as conductor at the Th. Feydeau, and flee to Lyons in 1792. App. Cons. Inspector in 1794, he lost this place, too, on the reduction of the number of teachers in 1802; but at the Restoration in 1814 he claimed and received the post of Royal Intendant. He wrote 12 operas; 2 cantatas; masses, requiems, psalms, and other church-music; also chamber-music, military music, pf.-pieces, etc.—Cf. A. Pougin, M. (Paris, 1864).—See Q.-Lex.

Marx, Adolf Bernhard, celebrated theorist and writer; b. Halle, May 15, 1795; d. Berlin, May 17, 1866. Intended for the law, he matriculated at the Univ. of Halle, but likewise studied music with Türk, and gave up a subsequent legal appointment at Naumburg to gratify his love for art. He continued the study of composition in Berlin under Zelter while gaining a livelihood by teaching; founded, with Schlesinger, the 'Berliner allgemeine musikalische Zeitung' in 1824, which he edited with conspicuous talent, as a warm advocate of German masters, until its cessation in 1830. Took the degree of Dr. phil. at Marburg, 1827; lectured on music at the Berlin Univ., and was app. prof. in 1830, and mus. dir. in 1832. With Kullak and Stern he founded the Berlin Cons. in 1850, retiring from it in 1856 to devote himself to literary and University work, and the teaching of composition. His intimate friendship with Mendelssohn was dissolved by the latter's disparagement of his (Marx's) compositions, which have, in fact, not stood the test of time (an opera, a melodrama, 2 oratorios, symphonies, etc.); his writings on musical theory and esthetics are valuable: Die Lehre von der musikalischen Komposition (4 vols. 1837–47; several times reprinted; new edition by Hugo Riemann); Allgemeine Musiklehre (1839; 10th ed. 1884; transl. into English); Über Malerei in der Tonkunst (1828); Über die Geltung Händel'scher Sologesänge für unsre Zeit (1829); Die alte Musiklehre im Streit mit unsrer Zeit (1842); Die Musik des 19. Jahrhunderts und ihre Pflege (1855); Ludwig van Beethovens Leben und Schaffen 1858; 6th ed., by G. Behnke, 1911); Gluck und die Oper (1863; 2 vols.); Anleitung zum Vortrag Beethoven'scher Klavierwerke (1863; new ed. by E. Schmitz, 1912; Engl. tr. by F. Gwinner, 1895); Erinnerungen aus meinem Leben (1865; 2 vols.); Das Ideal u. die Gegenwart (1867). A coll. of his essays was publ. by L. Hirschberg as Über Tondichter und Tonkunst (vol. i, 1912).—Cf. G. F. Selle, Aus A. B. M.'s litterarischem Nachlass (Berlin, 1898); L. Hirschberg, Der Tondichter A. B. M., in 'Sbd. Int. M.-G.' Maryon, Edward, b. London, Apr. 3, 1867. He received his first training in England; with several works in MS. he then went to Paris, where his first opera, l'Odalisque, won the gold medal of the Exposition of 1889; becoming dissatisfied with his work he burnt all MSS. (including the opera), and in 1891 st. pf. with Max Pauer in Dresden; then ent. the Cologne Cons., where he took courses in fugue and orch. with G. Jensen, and in comp. with F. Wüllner. On his return to England he devoted himself anew to comp., writing both text and music of the 1-act operas A Golden Shower, or Danae; The Feather Robe, or Fujiyama; Paolo and Francesca; also The Beatitudes for bar. solo, double ch. and orch., and a Requiem (written without bars). His most ambitious work is a heptalogy, The Cycle of Life; of this the prologue, Sangraal, and the first three dramas, Lucifer, Cain, and Magdalen, are completed. M. is now (1917) living in Montclair, N. J., as dir. of his own Cons.

Marzials, Theodor, popular song-comp.; b. Brussels, Dec. 21, 1850. Studied with M. L. Lawson in London; later in Paris and Milan. Since 1870, superintendent of the mus. dept. in the British Museum. Has ed. Songs of Italy and The Art of Vocalization.

Mascagni [-kăh'ñē], Pietro, b. Leghorn, Dec. 7, 1863. His father (a baker) wished him to study jurisprudence; but he learned piano-playing by stealth, later attending Soffredini's music-school (until 1881), where he studied pf., harm., cpt., and comp. His father, discovering this, confined him to the house, whence he was freed by an uncle, who promised to take care of the 14-year-old boy. He comp. a dram. cantata, In Filanda, and Schiller's Hymn to Joy (1881). Upon his uncle's death, Count Florestan supported him while studying at Milan Cons. under Ponchielli and Saladino (until 1884). From 1885–90 he was cond. of the munic. orch. at Cerignola. When the music-publisher Sonzongo offered a prize for a 1-act opera, M. sent in Cavalleria Rusticana, which created a veritable sensation at its first performance (Costanzi Th., Rome, May 17, 1890), and has since been heard the world over. The general enthusiasm which the work produced at first hearing has been termed 'an acute attack of Mascagnitis,' and notable critics have unmercifully condemned the music, while admitting the dramatic force of the libretto. Music and text certainly work in wonderful harmony in the swift and gloomy tragedy. So far, it has remained M.'s only genuine success. He brought out L'Amico Fritz (Rome, Costanzi Th., Oct. 31, 1891), and I Rantzau (Florence, Nov. 10, 1892), neither of which met expectations; there followed the 4-act opera seria Guglielmo Ratcliff (Milan, La Scala, Feb. 16, 1895; mod. succ.), the 2-act opera seria Silvano (ibid, Mar. 25, 1895; fiasco), and in the same year M. was app. Director of the Rossini Cons. at Pesaro, where he remained till 1902; then came the 1-act 'bozzetto' Zanetto (Pesaro, Mar. 2, 1896; succès d'estime), and the 3-act opera Iris (Rome, Costanzi Th., Nov. 22, 1898; success not brilliant; its prod. at La Scala, Milan, Jan. 19, 1899, partly revised, met with only fair success). But all this time the success of Cavalleria continued unabated, and made the composer a national idol; so much so, that when he had completed Le Maschere it was produced on Jan. 17, 1901, simultaneously at 7 of the most important Italian Opera houses (Rome, Milan, Turin, Genoa, Venice, Verona, Naples). The next opera was on a French text, Amica (Monte Carlo, Mar. 16, 1905); then followed Isabeau (Buenos Aires, June 2, 1911), Parisina (Milan, Dec. 15, 1913), and Lodoletta (Rome, Apr. 30, 1917). A recent 1-act opera, La Faida di Commune, has not yet been prod. He is now (1917) at work on an opera from Bracco's Piccolo Santo (text by Renato Simone). In 1902 he made a tour of the U. S., cond. his Cavalleria, Amico Fritz, Ratcliff, Zanetto and Iris, but owing to gross mismanagement the visit ended in disaster. A tour of South America in 1911 was more successful. He has also appeared frequently as cond. of symphony concerts. In 1890 he was made Knight of the Crown of Italy. Among various 'occasional' comps., Poema Leopardiano (for the centenary of G. Leopardi, 1898) and a Hymn in honor of Admiral Dewey (July, 1899) may be noticed.—The vogue of Cav. Rusticana is responsible for the seemingly endless crop of 1-act 'realistic' music-dramas which has sprung up on every side.—BIBLIOGRAPHY. G. Monaldi, P. M. L'uomo e l'artista (Rome, 1899); G. Marvin, P. M.: Biografia aneddotica (Palermo, 1904); G. Bastianelli, P. M. con nota delle opere (Naples, 1910); E. Pompei, M. nella vita e nell'arte (Rome, 1912).

Goldoni); from there he went to the T. Apollo in Rome, where he remained seven years, establishing his reputation as one of the foremost conductors of Italy; in 1893 he was selected by Verdi to conduct the première of Falstaff at La Scala, remaining there 4 years; since then he has appeared in many important opera-houses of Italy, Germany (chiefly conducting Falstaff), Spain and South America; now (1917) cond. of the symphony concerts at the Augusteo, Rome.—Works: The operas Lorenza (Rome, 1901) and La Perugina (Naples, 1909); a Requiem for soli, ch. and orch. in memory of King Victor Emanuel; do. a capp.; some chamber-music; an album of pf.-pcs.

Spent some time in Germany perfecting his principal work, The National Music-Course (in German as Die neue Gesangsschule).

Mason, William, distinguished Amer. pianist and pedagogue; b. Boston, Mass., Jan. 24, 1829; d. New York, July 14, 1908. Mason & Hamlin Co., celebrated firm of piano-manufacturers. The house was founded as the M. & H. Organ Co. in Boston in 1854 by Henry Mason, a son of Dr. Lowell M., and Emmons Hamlin. The latter, a brilliant mechanic, turned his attention to improving the quality of the reeds and obtaining great variety of tonal color, with the result that in 1861 the firm introduced the American Cabinet Organ. The firm became internationally famous, when at the Paris Expos. of 1867 its organs were awarded the 1st prize over numerous European competitors; since then they have exhibited at every important exposition in Europe and America, invariably taking the 1st prize. In 1882 they began the construction of pianofortes, introducing a new system of stringing which found immediate favor; of several improvements patented by them the most important is the Tension-Resonator (1902; described in the 'Scientific American,' Oct. 11, 1902), a device for preserving the tension of the sounding-board. Since 1906 Henry Lowell M., b. Boston, Aug., 1864, has been Pres. and Chairman of the board of directors.

Massenet [măhss-nā'], Jules (-Émile-Frédéric), born Montaud, near St.-Étienne (Loire), France, May 12, 1842; d. Paris, Aug. 13, 1912. Pupil of Laurent (pf.), Reber (harm.), Savard and Ambr. Thomas (comp.); after taking first prizes for piano-playing and fugue, he carried off the Grand prix de Rome with the cantata David Rizzio (1863). Prof. of composition at the Cons., from 1878 until his resignation in 1896; in 1878 he succeeded to the chair in the Académie vacated by Bazin; he was a Commander of the Legion of Honor, and Vice-President of the Soc. of Dramatic Authors. Even during his life M. enjoyed the distinction of being regarded by his countrymen as one of their classic masters. But his works became immensely popular in foreign countries also, and are still holding their own. This popularity is due to M.'s graceful, melodious style and his exquisite instrumentation, qualities that never fail to make an instant appeal. But it cannot be denied that M.'s music is monotonous in its saccharine sweetness; it lacks depth, and never grips. An excellent and inspired musician, he nevertheless lacked strong artistic convictions and ideals, and was too ready to give the public what it could enjoy without much intellectual effort. —Bibliography. Mat'zenauer, Margarete, dramatic sop.; b. Temesvar, Hungary, June 1, 1881. From a child she grew up in musical surroundings, her father being an orchl. cond. and her mother a dramatic soprano. As a girl her desire was to become an actress, but when her voice gave promise of success, she st. singing with Mme. Neuendorff in Graz, and later with Antonia Mielke and Franz Emerich in Berlin; her début as Puck (Oberon) at the Strassburg opera in 1901 was followed by a three-year engagement there; 1904–11, in leading contralto rôles at the Munich court opera, appearing also every summer in the Wagner festival performances at the Prinzregenten-Th.; sang Waltraute, Flosshilde and 1st Norn in Bayreuth in 1911; Amer. début as Amneris at M. O. H., with almost sensational success, on Nov. 13, 1911; since then one of the most brilliant stars of the organization; repeated her New York triumphs the following summer in Buenos Aires (Teatro Colón); since 1912 also eng. for principal rôles at the Stadtth., Hamburg. For the summer of 1912 she had been eng. to sing Kundry at Bayreuth. Owing to the sudden illness of Mme. Fremstad, who was to have sung that part on Jan. 1, 1912, at the M. O. H., Mme. M., at one hour's notice, and without orchl. rehearsal, gave a superb rendering of the rôle; because of that incident the portals of Bayreuth have been closed against her. Until the end of her Munich engagement she had sung only contralto rôles, but the unusual compass of her voice made her ambitious to essay the great soprano rôles, an ambition realized during the Metropolitan seasons; although retaining her contralto parts, she has called herself a soprano since 1914. In 1902, married Ernst Preuse of Munich (divorced in 1911); on June 26, 1912, married the Italian tenor Edoardo Ferrari-Fontana (q. v.; div. Jan., 1917). Her art has been characterized as follows: "A tragic actress of intense force and passion, Mme. M. possesses in addition a voice so rich and sonorous, and capable of such infinite gradations of color and emotional depiction, that the combination forms an irresistible whole." Besides all the soprano and contralto rôles from Rienzi to Parsifal, her répertoire includes Fidelio, Donna Elvira, Orfeo, Fides, Selica, Azucena, Dalila, Carmen, Mignon, Herodias (Salome), Klytemnestra (Elektra), Marschallin (Rosenkavalier), etc.

Maubourg [M.-Goffaux] (moh-boor'gô-foh'), Jeanne, operatic soprano; b. Namur, Belgium, Nov. 10, 1875. Destined at first for a teacher, she was taught pf. and harm. by her father (since 1894 artistic dir. of the Th. des Galéries St.-Hubert, Brussels); st. singing with Mme. Labarre and Mme. Jouron-Duvernay in Brussels, 1892–5. After a few concert-appearances she was invited by the directors of La Monnaie to sing Mercedes (Carmen) at a day's notice (1897), and, although without stage-routine, acquitted herself so creditably that she was eng. for 4 years; remained there till 1907, singing the 'Dugazon' (q. v.) rôles and many of the parts sung formerly by Galli-Marié; 1900–4, sang also at Cov. Garden; 1907–9, she appeared in Offenbach's and similar light works at the Galéries St.-Hubert (where her brother was cond.) and the Th. Molière: 1909–14, member of the M. O. H., making her Amer. début in La Fille de Mme. Angot at the New Th. on Dec. 14, 1909. In 1914 she opened a studio in New York. In 1911 she was married to the French comedian Claude Bénédict; divorced, 1915. As a proof of her versatility it may be mentioned that in Carmen she has sung the title-rôle, Micaëla, Frasquita, and Mercedes; in Lakmé, Mallika, Rose, and Ellen. In Brussels premières she created the rôles of Fiammina (Grisélidis), Le Prince charmant (Cendrillon), La Fée Urgèle (Silver's La Belle au bois dormant), Lisette (Pfeiffer's Légataire universel); in N. Y. premières, Sélysette (Ariane et Barbe-Bleue), Beatrice (Donne Curiose), The Maid (Amore dei tre Rè). Her répertoire includes the chief soprano parts in Don Giovanni, Rigoletto, Faust, Otello, Fra Diavolo, Armida, Falstaff, Germania, etc.

Mauke [mow'kĕ], Wilhelm, b. Hamburg, Feb. 25, 1867. Abandoned medicine to st. music with Huber and Löw in Basel; pupil of the Akad. der Tonkunst in Munich, 1892–3; is mus. critic of the 'Münchener Zeitung'; both in his writings and compositions he manifests himself an adherent of extreme modern principles. Has written the operas Der Taugenichts and Fanfreluche (Munich, 1912); an operetta, Der Tugendprinz (Vienna, 1910); a symph. poem, Einsamkeit; about 100 songs; also publ. a monograph on Ernst Mielck (1901).

Maurel [moh-räl']. Victor, dramatic baritone; b. Marseilles, June 17, 1848. A pupil of Vauthrot (singing) and Duvernoy (opera) at the Paris Cons., which he left in 1867 with the 1st prizes (divided with Gailhard) for vocal art and opera. Début in 1868 at the Opéra, as de Nevers in Les Huguenots, with slight success; then sang for several seasons in Italy, Spain, America (1874), London, Petrograd and Cairo (at Milan, in 1870, he created Il Guarany; at Naples, in 1871, Don Carlos). Rejoined the Opéra in 1879 with an established reputation, and remained there till 1894, excepting 1883–4 (consumed in a brilliant but financially unfortunate attempt to revive Italian opera at the Th. des Nations), and 1885–6 at the Opéra-Comique. During the winter of 1894–5 he sang at the M. O. H.; then, from 1895 till his retirement in 1904, he sang at the Op.-Comique. In the Autumn of 1903 he gave a series of lectures on vocal art at the Sorbonne, and after his retirement he devoted himself, with pronounced success, to teaching; from 1909–10 he taught in New York. Even in his prime his voice was not marvelous, but he used it with exquisite art; his dramatic powers, however, were so extraordinary that after the retirement of Faure (1878) he hardly had a rival on the French stage; he did, in fact, make a few appearances in spoken drama in Paris with great applause (1901–2). His creations of Iago in Otello (Milan, Feb. 5, 1887) and of Falstaff in Verdi's last work (ib., Feb. 9, 1893) are historical; in these rôles he has not yet been equaled; except for the Amer. première of Otello (when Iago was sung by Galassi, 1888) M. appeared in these parts in the French, English and Amer. premières; his last creation was the rôle of Mathias in Erlanger's Le Juif polonais (Op.-Com., Apr. 11, 1900). It is also worthy of record that he was the first interpreter in England of Telramund (May 8, 1875), Wolfram (May 6, 1876) and the Flying Dutchman (June 16, 1877). He publ. Le Chant renové par la Science (1892); Un problème d'Art (1893); A propos de la mise-en-scène de Don Juan (1896); L'Art du Chant (1897); Dix ans de carrière (1898; Ger. tr. by Lilli Lehmann as Zehn Jahre aus meinem Künstlerleben [1887–97], 1899).

Méhul [mā-ül'], Étienne-Nicolas, French opera-composer; b. Givet, Ardennes, June 22, 1763; d. Paris, Oct. 18, 1817. By dint of hard work, and with the friendly aid of a blind old organist, he learned to play the organ, and at ten was organist of the Couvent des Recollets at Givet. The fame of Wilhelm Hanser, organist at Lavaldieu monastery, attracted the boy; the abbot admitted him as a novice, so that he might be taught by Hanser, whose assistant he became in 1777. Next year he went to Edelmann in Paris for lessons in piano-playing and composition, supporting himself by teaching. Hearing Gluck's Iphigénie en Tauride, he was moved to seek an introduction to the master, by whose advice he turned from sacred to dramatic composition. For the sake of practice he wrote three operas (Psyché, Anacréon, Lausus et Lydie); a fourth, Alonzo et Cora, though accepted by the Académie de musique, was not perf. until 1791; meanwhile Euphrosyne et Coradin, ou le tyran corrigé, came out at the Th. Italien in 1790 with great success; good fortune likewise attended the production of Stratonice (1792), Le congrès des rois (1793, written with 11 others), Le jugement de Pâris (ballet; 1793), Le jeune sage et le vieux fou (1793), Horatius Coclès (1794), Phrosine et Mélidore (1794), and La caverne (1795); in this year M. was app. one of the four Inspectors of the newly established Conservatoire, and also elected a member of the Académie. In 1797 3 operas, Doria, La toupie et le papillon, and Le jeune Henri, were produced; the last was hissed off the stage, after the overture had been twice repeated in response to clamorous applause, because of the reverence still felt by republican France for the hero, Henri IV; this overture still survives. Now followed Le pont de Lodi (1797), Adrien (1798), Ariodant (1799), Épicure (1800), Bion (1800), l'Irato, ou l'emporté (1801; a vain attempt to imitate the Italian opera-buffa style, but so successful with the public that M. employed this lighter vein in several subsequent works), Une Folie (1802), Le Trésor supposé (1802), Joanna (1802), l'Heureux malgré lui (1802), Helena (1803), Le Baiser et la quittance (1803, with Boieldieu, Isouard, and Kreutzer), Les Hussites (1804), Les deux aveugles de Tolède (1806), Uthal (1806), Gabrielle d'Estrées (1806), and on Feb. 17, 1807, at the Théâtre Feydeau, his greatest work, the 3-act opera Joseph, which at first obtained only a succès d'estime in Paris, though much better received in the French provinces and Germany. For four years, M. wrote only the ballets Le retour d'Ulysse, and Persée et Andromède; Les Amazones, ou la fondation de Thèbes (1811), Le Prince troubadour (1813), l'Oriflamme (1814; with Berton, Kreutzer, and Paër), and La Journée aux aventures (1816), were still performed before his death; Valentine de Milan was completed by Daussoigne-Méhul, and brought out in 1822; Hypsipyle, Arminius, Scipion, Tancrède et Clorinde, Sésostris, Agar dans le désert and Le roi Œdipus have never been performed. Méhul's fame rests wholly upon his operas, in which he develops a robust dramatic style and fine orchestral effects. His overtures are often masterly; his symphonies were correctly written, but uninspired, and his pf.-sonatas were insignificant; some choral works (Chant du départ, Chant de victoire, Chant de retour, etc.) attained a certain vogue. He fell a victim to consumption, and his death was probably hastened by chagrin at the comparatively slight success of the last operas, due in part to Spontini's increasing celebrity. —Cf. P. Melba, Nellie [stage-name of Mrs. Nellie Porter Armstrong, née Mitchell], famous coloratura-soprano; b. Burnley, n. Melbourne, May 19, 1861. Her father, who had decided objections to anything connected with the stage, was nevertheless fond of music and proud of his daughter's talent. When she was only 6 years old he allowed her to sing at a concert in the Melbourne Town-Hall, but would not consent to her having singing-lessons; instead, she was taught piano, violin and harp, and even had instruction in harm. and comp. As she grew older she frequently played the organ in a local church and was known among her friends as an excellent pianist, while all the time her chief desire was to study singing. Not until after her marriage in 1882 to Captain Charles Armstrong was she able to gratify her ambition, when she began to study with a local teacher, Cecchi; her first public appearance as a singer was in Dec., 1885, in a performance of The Messiah in Sidney. The next year her father received a government appointment in London, and she accompanied him, determined to begin an operatic career. Her first concert in London (June 1, 1886) convinced her of the necessity of further study, and she went to Mme. Marchesi in Paris. Her début as Gilda at La Monnaie in Brussels (Oct. 12, 1887) created a veritable sensation; Sir A. Harris immediately engaged her for the spring season at Cov. Garden, where she appeared on May 24, 1888, as Lucia amid scenes of indescribable enthusiasm; with similar demonstrations she was received wherever she appeared: Paris (Opéra, as Ophélie, May 8, 1889), Petrograd May, 1890), Milan (La Scala, Mar., 1893; immense triumph over a carefully planned opposition), Stockholm and Copenhagen (Oct., 1893), New York (M. O. H., as Lucia, Dec. 4, 1893), Melbourne (Sept. 27, 1902). From her first appearance at Cov. Garden she has sung there regularly with the only exception of the seasons of 1909, '12 and '13; besides having been one of the most brilliant stars of several seasons at the M. O. H., she has also sung with Mr. Damrosch's company (1897–8) and at Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera (1906–7), and has made several transcontinental concert-tours of the U. S. Bemberg wrote for her Elaine and Saint-Saëns Hélène, in both of which operas she created the title-rôles (Cov. Garden, July, 1892, and Monte Carlo, Feb. 18, 1904 [resp.]). By nature Mme. M. was gifted with a voice of extraordinary beauty and bell-like purity; through her art she has made this fine instrument perfectly even throughout its entire compass (b♭-f³) and wonderfully flexible, so that she executes the most difficult fioriture without the least effort. As an actress she does not rise above the conventional, and for this reason she is at her best in parts demanding brilliant coloratura (Gilda, Lucia, the Queen, Violetta, Rosina, Lakmé, etc.). On a single occasion she attempted the tremendous rôle of Brünnhilde (Siegfried, M. O. H., Dec. 30, 1896), and met with disaster. As a coloratura singer she has not now, and possibly never had, a superior.—Cf. A. Murphy, M. A Biography (London; 1909; with a chapter on singing written by M.).

Soc.; 1903–6, prof. at the Vienna Cons.; since 1908 cond. of the Warsaw Philh. Soc. H. as Tosca (N. Y., Nov. 26, 1909); 1911–13, member of the Boston Opera Co. She uses her fine voice with great skill, and is gifted with splendid dramatic instinct. Men'delssohn, Felix (full name Jacob Ludwig Felix Mendelssohn-Barthol'dy), b. Hamburg, Feb. 3, 1809; d. Leipzig, Nov. 4, 1847. Grandson of the philosopher Moses Mendelssohn; son of the banker Abraham M., who removed to Berlin in 1812, during the French occupation of Hamburg; his mother was Lea Salomon-Bartholdy, of Berlin, and from her he received his first piano-lessons, in company with his elder sister Fanny [1805–47]. These lessons were continued by L. Berger; M.'s other teachers were Zelter (theory), and Hennings (violin); also Mme. Bigot for a short time in 1816 at Paris, whither M. had accompanied his father on a business trip. On Apr. 11, 1819, he entered the Singakademie (cond. by Zelter) as an alto; on Sept. 18 a composition by M., the 19th Psalm, was performed by the Akademie, of which, after the change of his voice to a tenor in his 16th year, he still remained a favorite member. M.'s talent for composition was likewise fostered by the Sunday performances of a small orchestra at his father's house, his own works finding speedy production. In 1825 his father again took him to Paris, to ask Cherubini's opinion on the adoption of a musical career by Felix; this opinion was strongly affirmative, and the master even offered to undertake the boy's further training, but the elder Mendelssohn considered the home atmosphere preferable. Indeed, M.'s genius could nowhere have been more healthfully stimulated; as early as 1820 he was regularly engaged in composition, producing in that year between 50 and 60 movements (a cantata, In rührend feierlichen Tönen; a little musical comedy for voices and pf.; a pf.-trio; 2 pf.-sonatas; a sonata for violin and pf.; 2 songs for 4 men's voices; songs, etc.); this many-sided activity is characteristic of his work through life. As a piano-player, his début was even earlier—on Oct. 24, 1818, he played at a public concert the piano-part of a trio with 2 horns, by Wölffl. In 1821 his talent for extemporizing was already noteworthy; being presented to Goethe in that year, and requested to execute a Bach fugue, his memory played him false, but not his quick wit, for he extemporized the forgotten development! The overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream was written in 1826, and is a most astonishing proof of the young composer's mental maturity, showing no less mastery and finish of form than the remaining numbers composed fifteen years later. In 1827 his opera, Die Hochzeit des Camacho, was performed with much applause at the Berlin Opera, but was nevertheless soon withdrawn by Spontini, then general musical director with almost unlimited powers, who had a dislike to M. In no single instance is the thoroughness of M.'s musical training more apparent than in his determination to bring out Bach's Passion acc. to St. Matthew in the Singkademie; in spite of Zelter's opposition, grudgingly withdrawn, the performance (the first anywhere since Bach's death) took place on March 11, 1829, and gave the initial impulse to the successful Bach propaganda in which M. was long the leading figure. In 1830, M. declined the proffered chair of music at the Berlin Univ. in favor of Marx. His first journey to England, undertaken at Moscheles' suggestion, had been made in the preceding year; on May 25 (1829) he conducted his symphony in C minor seated, after the fashion of the time, at the piano; some months after this performance the London Philharmonic Society, to which he dedicated the symphony, elected him an honorary member. Later he played the Concertstück by Weber, and (for the first time in England) Beethoven's concerto in E♭. Here it should be remarked, that M. was not only a pianist of the highest rank, but also a finished organist. Following this active concert-season, a long pleasure-tour through Scotland stimulated his teeming imagination. This was followed 1830–32 by travels through Germany, Austria, Italy and Switzerland to Paris; he then made his second visit to London, where he conducted the Hebrides overture, and played his G m. concerto and B m. Capriccio brillante. Here, too, his first book of 6 Songs without Words, finished in Venice, 1830, was published. In England, now and later, he found the musical environment far more genial than in Berlin, where, for some reason, he was not generally popular—witness his failure, in competition with Rungenhagen, to obtain the conductorship of the Singakademie on his return in 1833. And this after he had arranged a series of concerts for the benefit of the Orchestral Pension-Fund, himself conducting his Reformation symphony, the three overtures, Midsummer Night's Dream, Hebrides, and Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, etc. He was called to conduct the Lower Rhine Musical Festival at Düsseldorf in May, 1833; after a short visit to London, he returned to Düsseldorf to take charge, as Town Musical Director, of the church-music, the opera, and two singing-societies, all for the annual salary of 600 Thaler (about $450)! He gave most of the theatrical work into the hands of Julius Rietz within six months; after conducting the Lower Rhine Festival at Cologne, June 7–9, 1835, he accepted a call to the conductorship of the Gewandhaus Orchestra in Leipzig—an epoch-making point, not only in his personal career, but for the musical life of Leipzig and the world. Leipzig was not slow to respond to his masterly activity as a conductor, composer, and player; the University created him, in 1836, Dr. phil. (hon. c.); he infused new life into the orchestra, and, by calling Ferdinand David to his aid, gave it a leader who not merely (and most ably) seconded his own efforts, but who, by native force of character and musicianly ability, gave a tone of precision and pliability to this body of players which is still a tradition of vital force in the Gewandhaus. M.'s oratorio Paulus was brought out at the Lower Rhine Festival in Düsseldorf, May 22–24, 1836, he himself conducting. On March 28, 1837, he married Cécile Charlotte Sophie Jeanrenaud of Frankfort, the daughter of a French Protestant clergyman. Five children, Carl, Marie, Paul, Felix and 'Lili' (Elisabeth) were born to them, and their union was happy. During four weeks of this year M. was in England, and conducted Paulus (St. Paul) at the Birmingham Festival. In 1841 Friedrich Wilhelm IV invited M. to Berlin to take charge of the grand orchestral and choral concerts; but M. found the attitude of the court, the musicians, and even the public, more or less openly hostile, and wished to resign in October, 1842, but, at the King's especial request, remained to organize the music in the cathedral; the chosen body of singers later became famous as the 'Domchor' (cathedral-choir). M. also received the title of Royal General Musical Director; residence in Berlin was not required. Late in 1842, with von Falkenstein, Keil, Kistner, Schleinitz and Seeburg as directors, and Schumann, Hauptmann, David, Becker and Pohlenz as teachers, Mendelssohn organized the Conservatorium of Music at Leipzig (from the beginning under the patronage of the King of Saxony, and since 1876 the 'Royal' Cons.); it was opened on Jan. 16, 1843. M. himself taught when his other manifold duties permitted. The financial nucleus of the foundation was a legacy from Blümner of 20,000 Thaler ($15,000), left at the disposal of the King of Saxony for the promotion of art; M. had made a special journey to Dresden to interest the King in the conservatory-project. During his frequent absences, Hiller conducted the Gewandhaus Concerts 1843–4, and Gade 1844–5; in the autumn of 1845, M. resumed the bâton. During the summer of 1844, he conducted the Philharmonic Concerts in London, and took part, as a pianist, in numerous other concerts, everywhere receiving a most enthusiastic welcome. This was his eighth visit to Britain; his ninth was made memorable by his conducting the first performance of Elijah (at Birmingham, August, 1846). Returning to Leipzig, he resigned the Gewandhaus conductorship to Gade, and the superintendency of the piano-department to Moscheles, whom he invited from London to accept the position. For several years he had been jaded by overwork; the sudden death of his favorite sister, Fanny, was a shock which his overwrought nervous system could not withstand, and in a few months he followed her.—Mendelssohn left no mark as a dramatic composer, although he long and eagerly sought after a suitable libretto. Besides Die Hochzeit des Camacho he left fragments of the opera Lorelei (an Ave Maria, a vintage chorus, and the beautiful finale to Act I); the operetta Son and Stranger, op. 89; and 5 small unpubl. operas. His grandest productions are the oratorios Paulus (St. Paul) and Elias (Elijah), op. 36 and 70 respectively, the greatest works of their kind since the time of Handel and Haydn; Christus, op. 97, is unfinished. Other important vocal works with orch. are the symphony-cantata Lobgesang, op. 52; the ballade Die erste Walpurgisnacht, op. 60, for soli, ch., and orch.; 2 'Festgesänge,' An die Künstler (for male ch. and brass), and Zur Säcularfeier der Buchdruckerkunst ('Gutenberg Cantata,' for male ch. and orch.); music to the choruses, etc., of Antigone (op. 55), Athalie (op. 74), Œdipus in Colonos (op. 93), and A Midsummer Night's Dream (op. 61); Hymn for alto solo, ch. and orch. (op. 111); Psalms 115 (op. 31) and 95 (op. 46) for soli, ch. and orch.; Psalms 114 (op. 51) and 98 (op. 91), for male ch. and orch.; prayer Verleih' uns Frieden, f. ch. and orch.; soprano concert-aria Infelice! with orch. (op. 94).—VOCAL WORKS WITHOUT ORCH. are Psalm 42, f. ch. and organ; Psalms 2, 22, and 43, a 8, a cappella; Funeral Song f. mixed ch. (op. 116); Kyrie eleison f. double ch.; 6 anthems ('Sprüche') f. 8-p. ch. Mey'erbeer, Giacomo, famous dramatic composer, b. Berlin, Sept. 5, 1791; d. Paris, May 2, 1864. Of Jewish family, his real name was Jakob Liebmann Beer; a wealthy relative made him his heir on condition that he should prefix the name 'Meyer' to his patronymic; and 'Giacomo' (Jacob Italianized) was later assumed as an artist-name. He was a piano-pupil of Lauska and Clementi, and played in public at 7; began the study of theory under Zelter, but soon left this strict master for Anselm Weber, and from 1810–12 lived and studied with Abbé Vogler at Darmstadt, C. M. von Weber and Gänsbacher being his fellow pupils. Here he wrote an oratorio, Gott und die Natur (Singakademie, Berlin, 1811), and 2 operas, Jephthas Gelübde (Court Opera, Munich, 1813) and Abimelek, oder die beiden Kalifen (Munich, 1813); the first two were failures, but Abimelek was accepted for Vienna, and thither M. repaired. Already a brilliant pianist, Hummel's suave style so impressed him that he deferred his own début at Vienna for several months, successfully working to acquire the same fluent ease and finish. His opera was rather coolly received in Vienna (and later, as Wirth und Gast, in Prague and Dresden); still, despite pianistic triumphs, he felt dramatic composition to be his real vocation. Acting on Salieri's suggestion that Italian melody would prove a corrective for his heavy contrapuntal style, M. went to Venice in 1815; the vogue of Rossini's operas indicated the path to popularity, and M. entered it with a series of operas in the Italian vein—Romilda e Costanza (Padua, 1818), Semiramide riconosciuta (Turin, 1819), Emma di Resburgo (Venice, 1819; in Germany as Emma von Leicester), Margherita d'Angiù (La Scala, Milan, 1820), L'esule di Granata (Milan, 1822), and Il crociato in Egitto (Venice, 1824), this last with immense success. While writing it, he had visited Berlin with the vain hope of bringing out a 3-act German opera, Das Brandenburger Thor, and embraced the opportunity to call on his old friend Weber, in Prague, whose strong remonstrances against M.'s Italian transformation of himself seem to have borne fruit. Certain it is, that for six years M. produced no more operas. In 1826 he went to Paris to prepare the first representation of Il crociato. After this, his father's death, his own marriage, and the death of two of his children, also serve to explain his silence. But at this time he was also, on Mendel's authority, immersed in the study of French opera, from Lully onward; the result being Meyerbeer's third style of operatic composition, in which 'he united to the flowing melody of the Italians and the solid harmony of the Germans the pathetic declamation and the varied, piquant rhythm of the French.' Combining with these M.'s undeniable fecundity and originality of orchestral effect, and the theatrical ability and routine of his librettist, Scribe, it is no wonder that M.'s first French 'grand opera,' Robert le Diable (Grand Opéra, Nov. 21, 1831), fairly electrified the Parisians, and (incidentally) caused the Opéra to prosper financially. Les Huguenots followed on Feb. 20, 1836, and was recognized by cultured critics as vastly superior to Robert; though the general public, enjoying the flamboyant unrealities of the latter, was disappointed at first. Two years later M. began the composition of l'Africaine, which was destined to occupy him through life; irritated by the composer's continual demand for changes, Scribe after a while testily withdrew the libretto, but was mollified by M.'s entering heart and soul into the composition of another of his texts, Le Prophète, finished in the year 1842–3. After the production of Les Huguenots at Berlin, 1842, M. was called to that city by King Friedrich Wilhelm IV as General Mus. Director. Here his opera, Das Feldlager in Schlesien (1843), achieved only moderate success until Jenny Lind assumed the rôle of Vielka in 1844. He visited Vienna and London in 1847; on his return to Berlin, he brought out Wagner's Rienzi. In 1849, Le Prophète was at last produced at the Grand Opéra, Paris, on April 16; in 1854, it was followed by l'Étoile du Nord at the Opéra-Comique (much of the music taken from Das Feldlager in Schlesien), where Dinorah, ou le Pardon de Ploërmel, was brought out in 1859. Last in the series was l'Africaine (Grand Opéra, Apr. 28, 1865), just a year after his death; he had returned to Paris to take charge of the rehearsals in the spring of 1864.—M.'s fame is inseparably knit with his dramatic music, the popularity of which has long been on the wane.—Other works: Incidental music to Struensee (tragedy by Michael Beer, his brother; Berlin, 1846), one of his finest works; choruses to Æschylus' Eumenides; festival-play Das Hoffest von Ferrara; monodrama Thevelindens Liebe, f. sopr. solo, ch., with clar. obbligato (Vienna, 1813); Gutenberg cantata; cantata Maria und ihr Genius, for the silver wedding of Prince and Princess Carl of Prussia; Serenade Brautgeleite aus der Heimat, for the wedding of Princess Luise of Prussia; cantata Der Genius der Musik am Grabe Beethovens; ode to Rauch (the sculptor), f. soli, ch. and orch.; 7 sacred odes by Klopstock, f. 4 voice-parts a cappella; Festhymnus for the King of Prussia's silver wedding, f. 4 voices and chorus; Freundschaft, f. 4-part male ch.; Psalm 91, a 8; Pater noster a 4 w. organ; in MS. are 12 Psalms f. double choir, a Te Deum, a Stabat Mater, and a Miserere. Quarante mélodies à une et plusieurs voix were publ. in Paris (Brandus); others are Neben dir, f. tenor w. M. left by will 10,000 Thaler ($7,500) for the foundation of a Meyerbeer Scholarship; only Germans under 28, and pupils of the Berlin 'Hochschule,' the Stern Cons., and the Cologne Cons., may compete. Competitors must submit a vocal fugue a 8 (for double chorus), an overture f. full orch., and a dram. cantata a 3, w. orch. (text of cantata, and text and theme of fugue, are given). Six months in Italy, six in Paris, and six more in Vienna, Munich, and Dresden together, is the plan of study mapped out for the winner of the scholarship.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: A. de Lasalle, M., sa vie et le catalogue de ses œuvres (Paris, 1864); A. Monsigny [mŏhn-sē-ñē'], Pierre-Alexandre, b. Fauquembergue, n. St.-Omer, Oct. 17, 1729; d. Paris, Jan. 14, 1817. Forced at an early age, by his father's death, to support his family, he obtained a clerkship in 1749, and later the post of 'maître d'hotel' to the Duke of Orléans; renouncing former musical studies until, in 1754, a performance of Pergolesi's Serva padrona so fired his imagination, that he, after a five-months' course of harmony under Gianotti, succeeded in scoring a 1-act comic opera, Les Aveux indiscrets, most successfully prod. at the Th. de la Foire in 1759. The same theatre having brought out in quick succession and with increasing success 3 more operas of his, Le Maître en droit (1760), Le Cadi dupé (1761), and On ne s'avise jamais de tout (1761), the Comédie Italienne, jealous of its rival's good fortune, closed it by exercise of a vested privilege, and took over its best actors. M. thenceforward wrote exclusively for the Comédie Italienne: Le Roi et le fermier (1762), Rose et Colas (1764), Aline, reine de Golconde (1766), l'Île sonnante (1768), Le Déserteur (1769), Le Faucon (1772), La belle Arsène (1773), Le rendezvous bien employé (1774), were a series of triumphs culminating in Félix, ou l'enfant trouvé (1777). Here M. stopped abruptly; either fearful that he had done his best, or (as he himself modestly explained it) for lack of ideas. He lost a government position, and the stewardship of the Duke of Orléans' estates, in the Revolution, but the Opéra-Comique allowed him a pension of 2,400 francs; in 1800 he was made Inspector of Instruction at the Cons. (resigning in 1802). In 1813 he was elected to Grétry's chair in the Académie. He had a wonderful gift of melody, and rare sensibility in dramatic expression, but his theoretical training was deficient; still, he is regarded as one of the creators of French comedy-opera.—Cf. Quatremère de Quincy, Notice hist. sur la vie et les ouvrages de M. (Paris, 1818); M. Alexandre, Éloge historique de P.-A. M. (Arras, 1819); M. Hédouin, Éloge de M. (Paris, 1820); A. Pougin, M. et son temps (Paris, 1908). —See Q.-Lex.

Celebrated contrapuntist; publ. masses and many books of motets and madrigals; numerous others in MS. Some of these are also in collections; a few others are found in modern works (Hawkins's 'History' has a madrigal a 4; Dehn's 'Sammlung,' and Commer's 'Collectio,' each contains a motet).—Cf. G. van Doorslaer, Ph. de M. (Malines, 1895).—See Q.-Lex.

Montéclair [mŏhn-tā-klär'], Michel Pignolet de, b. Chaumont, 1666; d. Saint-Denis, n. Paris, Sept., 1737. One of the earliest players on the modern double-bass, he was a member of the Opéra orch., Paris, 1707–37. He prod. at the Opéra Les Fêtes de l'été, ballet-opera (1716), and Jephté, 3-act grand opera (1732); also comp. cantatas, a requiem (1736), 6 trios (sonatas) for 2 violins and bass, 'Brunettes' for flute and violin, flute-duos, etc.—Wrote Méthode pour apprendre la musique (1700; revised eds. 1709, 1736), and a Méthode pour apprendre à jouer du violon (1720; a pioneer violin-method; 2d ed. 1736).—See Q.-Lex.

Montemez'zi, Italo, b. Verona, 1875; pupil of the Milan Cons. Comp. of a cantata, Cantico dei cantici (1900), and of the operas Giovanni Gallurese (Turin, 1905), Hellera (ib., 1909), and L'amore dei tre rè (Milan, 1913; M. O. H., 1914).

Monteverdi [Monteverde], Claudio (Giovanni Antonio), b. Cremona [bapt. May 15], 1567; d. Venice, Nov. 29, 1643. He began his career as a viola-player in the orch. of Duke Gonzaga of Mantua, and studied counterpoint under the Duke's maestro, Ingegneri. His first published works, Canzonette a 3 (1584) and 5 books of madrigals a 5 (1587–99), foreshadowed his course as a composer; the harmonic progressions show a strong feeling for modern tonality, and the dominant seventh and other dissonances enter without preparation. M. was one of the reformers attacked by Artusi in the pamphlet L'Artusi ovvero delle imperfettioni della moderna musica (1600); he was, indeed, heartily in sympathy with the efforts of the Florentines Caccini and Peri to establish a modern musical drama. In 1603, he succeeded Ingegneri as maestro to the Duke, and wrote, for the wedding of the latter's son with Margherita of Savoy, his first dramatic work, Orfeo, received with unbounded enthusiasm. In 1608 he set to music Rinuccini's Arianna, and a ballet, Ballo delle ingrate. Meantime he had not only continued secular composition in the smaller forms (Scherzi musicali a tre voci in the French chanson-style [1607]), but had also won fame as a sacred composer (vespers and motets were publ. 1610); and in 1613 was elected to succeed Martinengo as maestro di cappella at San Marco, Venice, at a salary of 300 ducats (raised to 500 in 1616), and a house, besides travelling expenses. For several years his duties as composer for the church, and chorusmaster, absorbed his attention; in 1624 his epico-dramatic Il combattimento di Tancredi e Clorinda, in which a narrator ('testo') connects the dialogue, was brought out at the palace of Senator Mocenigo; in 1627 he wrote 5 dramatic intermezzi in episodes from Bradamante and Dido for the court of Parma, and in 1630 an opera, Proserpine rapita, was performed at the wedding of Mocenigo's daughter. In 1637 the first opera-house was opened at Venice, the Teatro di S. Cassiano, followed by a dozen more within sixty years; up to this time operas had been performed at the palaces of the nobility. M. now produced the operas Adone (Teatro SS. Giovanni e Paolo, Venice, 1639), Le Nozze di Enea con Lavinia (ibid., 1641), Il ritorno di Ulisse in patria (T. S. Cassiano, 1641), and L'Incoronazione di Poppea (SS. Giovanni e Paolo, 1642). He enlarged the orchestra, selected and combined with skill the instruments accompanying the voices, and first employed the tremolo of strings (Orpheus' lament, in Il combattimento di Tancredo, is accomp. by bass viols tremolo); besides this, his recitative is far freer and more dramatic, sometimes expanding to an arioso, and of a sentiment and force greatly surpassing the monotonous first-fruits of the 'stile rappresentativo.' Portions of Orfeo (publ. 1609) were republ. 1881 by the 'Gesellschaft für Musikforschung' (vol. x); portions of Poppea were republ. by H. Goldschmidt in his Studien zur Geschichte der ital. Oper (vol. ii, 1904). 3 more books of madrigals were publ.; Book vi, a 5, a 'dialogue' a 7 (1614), Book vii, Il concerto, a 1–6, and some songs (1619), and Book viii, Madrigali guerrieri ed amorosi con alcuni opuscoli in genere rappresentativo (1638). A few detached madrigals and other numbers have been reprinted in modern works. Besides the vespers and motets (1610), a mass a 6, masses a 4, psalms a 1–8, with litanies to the Virgin (1650), and Selva morale e spirituale (a collection of masses, psalms, hymns, Magnificats, motets, Salves, and a Lamento from Arianna; in MS. in the Vienna Library), have been preserved.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: E. Moody, Fanny (M.-Manners), dramatic soprano; b. Redruth, Cornwall, Nov. 23, 1866. She st. singing with Mme. Sainton-Dolby, and made her concert-début in a performance of her teacher's cantata Florimel (London, Apr. 25, 1885); her operatic début occurred as Arline (Bohemian Girl) with the Carl Rosa company in Liverpool (Feb., 1887); in April she won great success at Drury Lane, but remained with the Rosa company until her marriage to Charles Manners (q. v.) on July 5, 1890; since then she has always accompanied her husband on his tours as the principal soprano of his company. She is an artist of considerable versatility, having sung the entire Wagner répertoire as well as early and modern French and Italian works; her voice is rather light, but very sympathetic, and she is at her best in such parts as Eva, Elsa, Juliet, Marguerite, etc. She created the title-rôle in Pizzi's Rosalba (1902), Militza in MacAlpin's Crescent and the Cross (1903) and Tatiana in the Engl. première of Tchaikovsky's Eugen Onegin (1892).

Orch. prod. one of his symphonies; in 1899 R. Rettich played some chamber-music works in Berlin; in 1902 two of his operas were prod. in Cologne and in 1908 another opera in Kassel; at different times he lived in London, Lausanne and Munich. M.'s is a case without parallel in modern music; although he has publ. many important works (over 150 opus-numbers) through such houses as Schott, Simrock, Ricordi, Schirmer, etc., it seems impossible to discover his hiding-place, and while his works have not been played frequently, actual performances have been given by Ysaÿe, Thibaud, Casals, Marteau, etc. The works themselves give evidence not only of fine workmanship, but of real talent.—Works: The operas Die Pompadour (Cologne, 1902), Andreas Hofer (ib., 1902), Hochzeitsglocken (Kassel, 1908), Der Goldschmied von Paris; 7 symphonies (publ. op. 45, D m.; op. 65, E m. Some of his original melodies are Love thee, dearest, When 'midst the gay, One dear smile, and The Canadian Boat-song. He also composed short concerted vocal pieces; the terzetto O lady fair, and the 3-part glee The Watchman, won wide popularity.

Mo'scheles [mŏh'shĕ-less], Ignaz, eminent pianist, pedagogue and composer; b. Prague, May 30, 1794; d. Leipzig, Mar. 10, 1870. His father was a Jewish merchant. From 1804 he was trained by Dionys Weber at the Prague Cons., and at 14 played publicly a concerto of his own composition. On his father's death, shortly after, he went to Vienna to study under Albrechtsberger (cpt.) and Salieri (comp.), earning his living as a pianist and teacher. His conspicuous talents won him access to the best circles; he prepared the pf.-score of Beethoven's Fidelio under the composer's supervision, and entered into friendly rivalry with Meyerbeer, then a brilliant pianist, and Hummel. On tours to Munich, Dresden and Leipzig (1816), and to Paris (1820), his remarkable playing was much applauded; he was the pioneer in developing the various modifications of tone by touch, afterwards exploited by Liszt and his following of the 'orchestral' school. In 1821 M. settled in London; though he made frequent trips to the Continent, and gave Mendelssohn piano-lessons at Berlin in 1824. He had increasing success in London both as a teacher and composer, and his concerts were thronged. His friendship with Mendelssohn was cemented by the latter's repeated visits to London; and in 1846 he was persuaded to join Mendelssohn's staff of teachers in the newly founded Leipzig Conservatorium. Here he contributed in no small measure to the fame of the institution, and trained a host of pupils from all quarters of the globe. He was noted for his sympathetic interpretation of compositions of the most various schools, and for fine flights of free improvisation; his playing was energetic, brilliant, and strongly rhythmical—features equally characteristic of his compositions (of very unequal merit), in which a sustained loftiness of style is at times blended with no mean emotional power.—Works (142 opus-numbers; those up to 80 appeared before 1830): 8 pf.-concertos:—No. 1, op. 45; No. 2, op. 56 in E♭; No. 3, op. 60 in G m.; No. 4, op. 64; No. 5, op. 87 in C; No. 6, op. 90 in B♭ (fantastique); No. 7, op. 93 (pathétique); No. 8, op. 96 (pastoral); Nos. 3, 5 and 6 are favorites;—also f. pf. and orch., Marche d'Alexandre, op. 32; Souvenirs d'Irlande, op. 62; Anklänge aus Schottland, op. 75; Souvenirs de Danemark, op. 72;—f. pf. w. other instrs., Grand septuor (pf., vln., vla., clar., horn, 'cello, d.-bass), op. 88; Grand sextuor (pf., vln., flute, 2 horns, 'cello), op. 35; Vars. on an Austrian melody (pf., 2 vlns., vla., 'cello, d.-bass), op. 42; pf.-trio, op. 84; duos with violin, with horn, and with guitar; sonata f. pf. and 'cello, op. 121; etc.;—f. 2 pfs., Hommage à Händel, op. 92 (very effective); Duo concertant on Preciosa, op. 87b; Les Contrastes, op. 115 (2 pfs., 8 hands);—f. pf. 4 hands, Sonata in E♭, op. 47, and Sonate symphonique in B m., op. 112;—f. pf. solo, Sonate caractéristique, op. 27; Sonate mélancolique, op. 49; Allegro di bravura, op. 51; La Tenerezza (rondo), op. 52; Les Charmes de Paris, op. 54; also excellent studies (24 Characteristic St., op. 70; 12 ditto, op. 95; 54 Études de concert, op. 111; l'Ambition, and l'Enjouement [2 études]; etc.). At first a piano-teacher, and, as a composer, a disciple of the classic school, he became enamoured of the national music. Liszt (who later regarded him as the noblest representative of Hungarian music) proposed in 1857 to bring out M.'s German opera Maximilian, but ventured to suggest some changes, whereupon the composer threw the MS. into the fire. From 1842 he lived in Pest; the transformation of his style took place about 1860, and in 1861 he prod. an Hungarian opera, Szép Ilonka; a second, Almos, was not perf. His other works are a funeral symphony for Count Szechenyi; a symphonic poem, Triumph and Mourning of the Honved; an overture with the national song 'Szozat'; piano-pieces (Studies for the Improvement of Hungarian Music; Childhood's Realm); etc.

M. was trained at home, in the Dresden Cons., and at the Conservatories of Stern and Kullak in Berlin, in which latter he taught for several years. His first public concert, at Berlin, 1873, was highly successful, and, followed by tours to other German cities, and to Warsaw and Paris, establ. his fame as a pianist. Until 1897, M. made Berlin his headquarters; since then he has been living in Paris. In 1899 he was elected a member of the Berlin Akademie.—As a composer he is most widely known by his elegant and dainty salon-music for piano; the Spanish Dances brought his pieces into vogue, and the concert-studies, concert-waltzes, gavottes, Skizzen, a Tarantella, a Humoresque, etc., have also won favor among pianists. In larger forms he has successfully produced an opera, Boabdil, der Maurenkönig (Berlin, 1892); the music to Grabbe's Don Juan und Faust (1896); a ballet, Laurin (1896); a symphonic poem, Jeanne d'Arc, op. 19; Phantastischer Zug f. orch.; Aus aller Herren Länder f. orch., op. 23; 2 orchl. suites (F, op. 39; G m., op. 47); a violin-concerto, op. 30; a pf.-concerto in E, op. 59; Der Schäfer putzte sich zum Tanz, scene from 'Faust' for soli, ch. and orch.; a Suite for 2 violins and pf., op. 71. Mottl, Felix, b. at Unter-St. Veit, near Vienna, Aug. 24, 1856; d. Munich, July 2, 1911. His fine boy-soprano voice gained him admission to the Löwenberg 'Konvikt'; he studied thereafter at the Vienna Cons. under Hellmesberger (conducting), Dessoff (comp.), Bruckner (theory), and Scheuer and Door (pf.), graduating with high honors. In 1875 he went to Wagner as one of the 'musikalische Assistenz' during the preparations for the first Bayreuth festival. He cond. the Academical 'Wagnerverein' for some time, and in 1880 [correct date] succeeded Dessoff as court Kapellm. at Karlsruhe, where he also cond. the Philharm. Concerts until 1892; in 1893 the Grand Duke app. him General Musical Director. In 1886 he acted as conductor-in-chief at Bayreuth, and his distinguished success in that capacity won the flattering offer of an appointment as court Kapellm. of the Berlin Opera, which he declined. In 1898 he was also obliged to decline a similar call to Munich. As a 'travelling conductor' M. directed successful concerts in London (1893, '94) and Paris. In 1903 he resigned his position in Karlsruhe, and went as 'Generalmusikdirektor' to Munich; in 1904 he was app. co-dir. (with H. Bussmeyer) of the 'Kgl. Akademie der Musik'; in 1907 he also became dir. of the court opera. In 1903 he was engaged by Conried to conduct the projected performances of Parsifal at the M. O. H. in New York, but after careful preparation of the work he withdrew at the last moment owing to the protests of the Wagner family, leaving the direction of the work to Alfred Hertz. However, he cond. some of the other Wagner works, and a symphony concert at the M. O. H., during the season of 1903–4. In 1892 M. married the opera-singer Henriette Standhartner, from whom he was subsequently divorced; shortly before his death he married Zdenka Fassbender (b. Tetschen, Dec. 12, 1879), since 1906 principal soprano at the Munich court-opera.—M. was one of the greatest conductors of his time, a man of wonderful versatility. On Feb. 1, 1884, he brought out Cornelius's Barbier von Bagdad in a new version, entirely reorchestrated; when he became convinced that this 'arrangement' had turned out somewhat too radical, he made a new arrangement with Hermann Levi, and in this form the work has become a fixture in the répertoire of German opera-houses. In 1890 he also cond. the first complete performance of both parts of Berlioz's Les Troyens (Karlsruhe, Dec. 7, 8 [in German]); he orchestrated Wagner's Fünf Gedichte; edited Wagner's early overtures, König Enzio, Polonia, Christoph Columbus and Rule Britannia (1907); his complete vocal scores of Wagner's dramatic works were publ. posthumously in the 'Ed. Peters' (1914). He also orchestrated works of Handel, Rameau, Mozart, Loewe and Schubert. His few original comps., showing masterly workmanship without real inspiration, are the operas Agnes Bernauer (Weimar, 1880), and the 1-act Fürst und Sänger (Karlsruhe, 1893); a 'Festspiel,' Eberstein (Karlsruhe, 1881); a 'Tanzspiel,' Pan im Busch (ib., 1900); a string-quartet in F♯ m. After his death she resumed lesson-giving; in 1820 her eyesight failed.

He married Anna Maria Pertlin of Salzburg in 1747; of their 7 children only two, 'Nannerl' and Wolfgang, passed the age of one year. Mozart [moh'tsahrt], Wolfgang Amadeus, (baptismal names Johannes Chrysostomus Wolfgangus Theophilus,) was born in Salzburg, Jan. 27, 1756; d. in Vienna, Dec. 5, 1791. In his fourth year he manifested such eager and intelligent interest in his sister's clavichord-lessons, that his father began teaching him, as well; he also composed little pieces. His progress was so rapid that in January, 1762, the father ventured to introduce his children to the public on a concert-trip to Munich, and in September to Vienna; the Emperor, Francis I, frequently invited the children to the palace, where Wolfgang was wholly at his ease amid the brilliant assemblage, caring only for the approval of connoisseurs. Some of the pieces which he played were sonatas by D. Paradies and J. C. Bach, and a concerto by Lucchesi. While in Vienna, a small violin was given him, on which he learned to play without instruction; he learned the organ in the same manner, after the use of the pedals had been explained. A longer journey, to Paris, was undertaken in 1763; the brother and sister gave private and public concerts on the way, and in Frankfort Wolfgang played concertos both on the harpsichord* and the violin; accompanied symphonies on the harpsichord; and finished by long improvisations 'out of his head.' In Paris the pair played before the royal family, and gave two brilliant public concerts. Here Wolfgang's first publ. compositions appeared, op. 1 and 2, each comprising II Sonates pour le clavecin [2 harpsichord-sonatas] with violin ad lib. The travellers' reception in England (1764) was so cordial, that they remained there about 15 months; the King tried M.'s faculty for sight-reading with works by Bach, Handel, Abel, etc., and greatly admired his playing. Here Wolfgang composed six sonatas for violin and harpsichord, and his first symphonies, which were performed repeatedly. Of his marvellous progress his father wrote home: "Our high and mighty Wolfgang knows everything in this, his eighth year, that one can require of a man of forty." On the return-journey they passed through Lille, The Hague, Paris,

*The clavichord and harpsichord were his instruments up to 1777, when he visited Augsburg and tried the new pianofortes constructed by Stein; with which he was delighted that he thenceforward played on, and wrote for, the pianoforte.

Dijon, Bern, Zurich, Donaueschingen, Ulm, Munich, etc.; and arrived in Salzburg in November, 1766, having been absent three years. After an interval of rest and serious study, during which M. composed his first oratorio (1767), they revisited Vienna in 1768, and M. wrote, at the Emperor's request, his first opera, La finta semplice; its production was prevented by intrigues, although Hasse and Metastasio declared that thirty operas, in no way equal to the boy's, had been given there (it was brought out at Salzburg in 1769). However, the 'Liederspiel' Bastien und Bastienne was privately performed; and M. made his first appearance at a large public concert as a conductor, directing his own Solemn Mass (Dec. 7, 1768). Returning to Salzburg, he was appointed Konzertmeister to the Archbishop. For the purpose of broadening his son's education, Leopold Mozart decided on an Italian tour, leaving home in Dec:, 1769. The program of a concert at Mantua, Jan. 16, 1770, exhibits M.'s versatility at the age of 14:—A Symphony of his own composition; a Clavichord-concerto, which will be handed to him, and which he will immediately play prima vista; a Sonata handed him in like manner, which he will provide with variations, and afterwards repeat in another key; an Aria, the words for which will be handed to him, and which he will immediately set to music and sing himself, accompanying himself on the clavichord; a Sonata for clavichord on a subject given him by the leader of the violins: a Strict Fugue on a theme to be selected, which he will improvise on the clavichord [harpsichord?]; a Trio, in which he will execute a violin-part all'improvviso; and finally, the latest Symphony composed by himself.—It was in Rome that M., after twice hearing Allegri's famous Miserere, wrote out the entire score from memory, without a mistake. This journey was a veritable triumphal progress; his concerts were crowded, his genius recognized by the highest musical authorities; the Pope conferred on him the order of the Golden Spur, and he was elected a member of the Bologna Philharmonic Academy, after passing the required examinations. At Milan his 3-act opera seria Mitridate, re di Ponto, was enthusiastically received on Dec. 26, 1770, and had 20 consecutive performances under M.'s own direction. He returned to Salzburg in March, 1771; but in August again visited Milan to bring out a dramatic serenade, Ascanio in Alba, written for the wedding festivities of Archduke Ferdinand (Oct. 17, 1771); it quite eclipsed Hasse's festival opera Ruggiero. Next year his friendly protector, the Archbishop of Salzburg, died; his unmusical successor, Hieronymus, Count of Colloredo, cared little for M.'s genius, and in the end heaped indignities upon him. It was for his installation (1772) that M.'s dramatic Il sogno di Scipione was penned. Lucio Silla (Milan, Dec. 26, 1772) and La finta giardiniera (Munich, Jan. 13, 1775) were the occasion of trips to those cities for their production. On April 23, 1775, Il re pastore was brought out at Salzburg during Archduke Maximilian's visit. M.'s insufficient income caused him to resign his position in 1777; accompanied by his mother, he repaired to Munich, in hopes of obtaining an appointment commensurate with his abilities; disappointed here, and also in Augsburg and Mannheim, they journeyed to Paris, where a symphony of M.'s was performed at a Concert spirituel. But the war between the Gluckists and Piccinnists was at its height, and little attention was paid to the young composer. He had the further misfortune to lose his mother, who died July 3, 1778. His expectations unrealized, M. resumed his function of Konzertmeister at Salzburg, also succeeding Adlgasser as court organist in 1779, with a salary of 400 florins. The opera Idomeneo (Munich, Jan. 29, 1781) was the first dramatic work in his mature (classic) style. In the summer of that year M. definitively left the service of the Archbishop, whose treatment had grown unbearable; and settled in Vienna. (Koželuch declined the Archbishop's offer of Mozart's place, at a salary of 1,000 florins, with the remark, "If he lets such a man go, how would he treat me!") Commissioned by the Emperor to write an opera, M. composed Belmonte und Constanze, oder Die Entführung aus dem Serail, which was most successfully produced, despite the machinations of the theatrical clique, on July 12, 1782; a month later he married Constance Weber, the sister of his youthful flame Aloysia, whom he had met in Mannheim. A period of real poverty set in. His wife was a careless housekeeper, and he himself an improvident liver, fond of pleasant company and fine dress, of dancing, bowling, billiards, and kindred pleasures (but, despite allegations to the contrary, never dissipated or dissolute); the meagre receipts for compositions and concerts were quickly spent, and, though an indefatigable worker, he was never free from pecuniary anxieties. A musical comedy, Der Schauspieldirektor, was produced at Schönbrunn, February 17, 1786; on May 1 his admirable opera buffa Le nozze di Figaro (Marriage of Figaro) came near failing in Vienna through the intentional lapses of the jealous Italian singers (at that time Paisiello, Sarti, and Cimarosa, were the supreme arbiters of musico-dramatic taste in Vienna). But the hearty and spontaneous welcome accorded to this masterpiece and its author in Prague, partially made up for this rebuff; he was invited to lodge in the palace of Count Thun, and every attention was bestowed on him. Next year, the unexampled success of his grandest work, Don Giovanni [Don Juan] at Prague (Oct. 29, 1787), coupled with the fear that M. might accept favorable offers to go to England, moved the Emperor to show tardy and scanty recognition of his genius by appointing him 'chamber-composer' at 800 florins annually (Gluck, just deceased, as court composer had 2,000 florins). In this year (1788) M. ceased giving public concerts at Vienna, appearing there but once more, in 1791. In 1789 he accompanied Prince Carl Lichnowski to Berlin, on the way playing before the Dresden court, and in the Thomaskirche at Leipzig. King Friedrich Wilhelm II, after hearing him at Potsdam, offered him the post of 1st Royal Kapellmeister, with 3,000 Thaler ($2,250) a year; but M., with simple trust in and loyalty to his 'good Kaiser,' refused the benevolent offer—his last opportunity, as it proved, of ridding himself of money-troubles. For the Emperor's only response to the news of the King's offer, was an order for a new opera (Così fan tutte; Vienna, Jan. 26, 1790), which seems to have made little impression beside the fashionable Italian works. In October M. attended the coronation of Emperor Leopold II at Frankfort, full of joyful anticipations which, as usual, were not realized. He came back to Vienna in time to bid farewell to his fatherly friend Haydn, then about to set out for London. For the coronation of Leopold II at Prague, as King of Bohemia, M. was invited to write a festival opera; and La clemenza di Tito was performed on Sept. 6, 1791, the eve of the ceremony. Already suffering from illness, overwork, and the excitement and fatigue of the journey, he returned to Vienna, and still, at Schikaneder's entreaty, composed Die Zauberflöte [Magic Flute] (Vienna, Sept. 30, 1791). The writing of his last work, the Requiem, was interrupted by fainting fits, and in his morbid depression of spirits he imagined that he had been poisoned. The Requiem was just completed when he died (v. Engl's pamphlet on the Mozart Centenary, 1891). The immediate cause of his death was malignant typhus; the funeral was in the open air, near St. Stephen's Cathedral, and the coffin was accompanied by a few friends only part way to the cemetery of St. Marx, where he was buried in the ground allotted to paupers. Thus even his last resting-place is not exactly known. A monument was erected to his memory in the above cemetery in 1859; Salzburg had honored him with a grand monument in 1841.

Mozart is one of the brightest stars in the musical firmament. In his music breathes the warm-hearted, laughter-loving artist, living in and for art, whose genial nature all the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune might wound, but could not embitter. Joy is the keynote of his compositions; the rare note of tragedy or mourning is but a brief minor episode. From an instinctive repugnance to demonstrative excess of feeling, flowed plastic serenity of form; in his heartfelt melody German depth of emotion is expressed with Italian frankness, making his great dramatic works perennially fresh. That his piano-works are less so, is due chiefly to a century of progress in technical means of expression; yet his D-major concerto of 1788 (for example) still charms by suave euphony, like many lesser pieces. Among his symphonies the 'Jupiter,' in C, and those in G minor (1789) and E♭, are prominent. In finish of form, Cherubini and Mendelssohn are most akin to M.; in soulful melody, Schubert is his lineal successor. Like Schubert and Mendelssohn, his productivity was astounding, and embraced all departments of musical composition. The first complete edition of M.'s works (528 comps. in 24 series), prepared by Köchel, Nottebohm, Rietz, Espagne, Reinecke, Brahms et al., was issued by Breitkopf & Härtel from 1876–86; it contains: (1) CHURCH-MUSIC [Series 1–4]: 15 masses, 4 litanies, 1 Dixit, 1 Magnificat, 4 Kyries, a madrigal, a Veni Sancte, a Miserere, an Antiphone, 3 Regina coeli, a Te Deum, 2 Tantum ergo, 2 German church-songs, 9 offertories, a De profundis, an aria, a motet f. sopr. solo, a 4-p. motet, a Graduale, 2 hymns, a Passion cantata, and the cantatas Davidde penitente, and (masonic) Maurerfreude and Kleine Freimaurercantate.—(2) STAGE-WORKS [Series 5]: Die Schuldigkeit des ersten Gebots (only partially by M.), Apollo et Hyacinthus (Latin comedy with music), Bastien et Bastienne, La finta semplice, Mitridate, Ascanio in Alba, Il sogno di Scipione, Lucio Silla, La finta giardiniera, Il re pastore, Zaïde (German operetta; unfinished), Thamos, König in Ägypten (heroic drama; choruses and entr'actes; Berlin, 1786), Idomeneo, re di Creta, ossia Ilia ed Idamante, Belmonte und Constanze, Der Schauspieldirektor, Le nozze di Figaro, Don Giovanni, Così fan tutte, La clemenza di Tito, Die Zauberflöte.—(3) VOCAL CONCERT-MUSIC [Series 6]: 27 arias, and 1 rondo, f. sopr. w. orch.; 1 alto aria; 8 tenor arias; 5 arias and an arietta f. bass; a German warsong; a duet f. 2 soprani; a comic duet f. sopr. and bass; 6 terzets; 1 quartet.— (4) SONGS, ETC. In the 'Ztschr. I. M.-G.' (Nov., 1908) Wyzewa and St.-Foix adduce conclusive evidence that certain works listed by Köchel and publ. in B. & H.'s ed. are not original works of M., but copies in his handwriting of works of other composers. The works in question are: Symphony No. 3 (Köchel 18) is by K. F. Abel; Symphony No. 37 (K. 444) is by Michael Haydn; the first four pf.-concerts (K. 37, 39, 40, 41) are studies after works by Joh. Schobert.

There should be mentioned, finally, (1) the Mozart Scholarship, based on the surplus receipts of a Musical Festival given by the Frankfort 'Liederkranz' on June 25, 1838. The interest of the fund, amounting in 1915 to 1800 marks, is applied quadrennially to the aid of talented young composers of limited means; and (2) the Mozarteum at Salzburg, a celebrated municipal musical institute founded in 1842 in memory of Salzburg's greatest son; it consists of an orchestral society, pledged to perform M.'s church-music in the 14 churches of the town, and to give 12 philharm. concerts yearly; a music-school, in which the musicians of the orchestra give instruction; and an interesting museum of Mozart relics, etc. Since 1880 a yearly report has been issued. Under the collective title of 'Internationale Mozart-gemeinde' branches were established in 1888 in Austria and Germany, of which those in Berlin and Dresden have been especially active.

Founded the Cecilia Society at Lemberg, where he lived many years as a music-teacher, then going to Vienna and Karlsbad.—Works: 2 pf.-concertos, a string-quartet, a pf.-trio, a violin-sonata, a pf.-sonata, variations, polonaises, etc., f. pf.—Cf. Mraczek [mrăh'chĕhk], Joseph Gustav, b. Brünn, Mar. 12, 1878. He received his first instruction from his father, the 'cellist Franz M. (d. 1898); from his eighth year he sang as chorister in various churches and attended the mus.-school of the Musikverein at Brünn; 1894–6, pupil of Hellmesberger, Stocker and Löwe at the Vienna Cons.; after travelling a year as a violin-virtuoso he was from 1897–1902 concert-master at the Stadtth., and since 1898 prof. of vl. at the mus.-school of the Musikverein in Brünn. He attracted wide and favorable attention with his symphonic burlesque Max und Moritz (Brünn, 1911; since then played throughout Germany and by several larger orchs. in the U. S.). Other works: Ruslans Traum, symph. interlude for orch.; incid. music to Kismet; a pf.-quintet in E♭; pcs. for vl. and pf.; pf.-pcs.; the operas Der gläserne Pantoffel (Brünn, 1902), Der Traum (Berlin, 1912), Die Insel Ábelö (Breslau, 1915). Another opera, Idkar, was finished in 1916.

Muck [mŏŏk], Karl, famous orchl. conductor; b. Darmstadt, Oct. 22, 1859. He received his first mus. instruction from his father, and also st. pf. for a short time with Kissner at the Kgl. Musikschule in Würzburg; being, however, destined for a learned career, he st. classical philol. at the Univs. of Heidelberg and Leipzig; Dr. phil., 1880. At Leipzig he also attended the Cons., and in 1880, shortly after receiving his degree, he made a very successful début as pianist at the Gewandhaus; instead of continuing a career begun so auspiciously, he accepted a position as chorus-master at the municipal opera in Zurich, where his ability soon secured him the post of Kapellm.; then went in a similar capacity to Salzburg, Brünn, and Graz; there Angelo Neumann heard him, and in 1886 engaged him as Kapellm. for the Landesth. in Prague, and as Seidl's successor for his travelling Wagner-Th. In these positions M. had ample opportunity to demonstrate his extraordinary qualities as cond., especially through his performances of the Ring-dramas (1889) in Petrograd and Moscow, and (1891) at the Lessing Th. in Berlin. Here he was eng. in 1892 as 1st Kapellm. at the R. Opera, also frequently cond. the Symphony concerts of the Kgl. Kapelle; of the numerous invitations to appear as visiting cond. he could accept only a limited number; from 1894–1911 he cond. the Silesian Mus. Festivals; 1899, the Wagner répertoire at Cov. Garden; 1903–6, alternating with Mottl, the Philh. concerts in Vienna; besides, he appeared with enormous success in Paris, Madrid, Brussels, Copenhagen, Rome, etc.; since 1901 he has been the reg. cond. of the Parsifal perfs. at Bayreuth. During the winter of 1906–7 he obtained leave to direct the Boston Symph. Orch. (Amer. début Boston, Oct. 12, 1906), and attempts were made to secure him as permanent cond.; but, he obtained leave only for the season of 1907–8. On his return to Berlin he was made General-Musikdirektor (1908). After long negotiations Emperor William in 1912, with great reluctance, consented to release him; in the fall M. returned to America as permanent cond. of the Boston Symph. Orch. His farewell appearance at the R. Opera (he had chosen Tristan und Isolde) was made the occasion of a tumultuous demonstration. During the 20 years of his activity in Berlin he conducted 1,071 performances of 103 operas, of which 35 were novelties. He is the recipient of numerous orders and decorations. As a matter of curiosity it may be recorded that M. does not compose.

Mudie, Thomas Molleson, b. Chelsea, Engl., Nov. 30, 1809; d. London, July 24, 1876. Pupil of Crotch and Potter at the R. A. M., 1823–32; prof. of pf. there, 1832–44; organist at Galton, Surrey, 1834–44; then taught in Edinburgh, and returned to London in 1863.—Works: Symphonies in C, B♭, F, and D; string-quintets, -quartets, -trios, etc.; pf.-music; anthems, sacred duets and songs, songs, etc. Macfarren praises 3 symphonies, a quintet, and a trio, prod. by the Soc. of British Music.

Muf'fat, Georg, noteworthy comp.; b. Schlettstadt, c. 1645; d. Passau, Feb. 23, 1704. He studied Lully's style in Paris for 6 years, was org. of Strassburg Cath. till 1674, to the Bishop of Salzburg till 1687, then org. and (1690) Kapellm. to the Bishop of Passau.—Publ. organ-works, sonatas for various instrs., orchl. suites and 'concerti grossi.' Suavioris harmoniae florilegium (2 parts, 1695, '98) was republ. by H. Rietsch in 'Dkm. der Tonk. in Österreich' (vols. i, 2 and ii, 2); Auserlessener . . . Instrumentalmusik erste Versamblung (1701), with selections from Armonico tributo (1682), republ. by E. Mussorg'sky, Modest Petrovitch, b. Karev, Govt. of Pskov, Russia, Mar. 28, 1835; d. Petrograd, Mar. 28, 1881. He received his first instruction from his mother on the pf., on which instrument his progress was very rapid; when he ent. the military acad. at Petrograd he continued to take pf. lessons from Gerke, with no intention of taking up music as a profession; after graduation in 1856 he joined one of the crack regiments. There he made the acquaintance of Dargomÿzhsky, who introduced him to Cui and Balakirev; the latter recognized M.'s original talent, and persuaded him to devote himself to music; thereupon M. left the army, but, instead of taking a systematic course in theory, began to study by himself, with some advice from Balakirev, the works of Beethoven, Schumann and Glinka. He had, indeed, become a good pianist, but he never acquired an adequate command of the technic of composition. Besides this handicap, poverty compelled him in 1863 to accept an uncongenial position in the government service, which he was never able to resign. It is not surprising, therefore, that his musical output is limited; yet it is sufficient to establish his place among the most talented and original of Russian composers. His best works are his songs (about 30), which for power of expression and depth of feeling stand perhaps unrivalled by any other Russian musician. However, he is best known for his national 4-act opera, Boris Godunov, begun in 1868, finished two years later, and first prod. at the Maryinsky Th. in Petrograd on Feb. 5, 1874. It was revised and entirely reorchestrated by Rimsky-Korsakov in 1896, and in this form it has found its way into the répertoire of the principal opera houses of Europe; the Amer. première took place at the M. O. H. on Mar. 19, 1913. Chovantchina, a 5-act opera (also on a national subject) was left almost completed in vocal score; Rimsky-Korsakov added the last few pages, revised and orchestrated the entire work, and had it prod. at Petrograd in 1885. Of the operas Salammbô (1863), The Marriage (1868) and The Fair at Sorochinsk (1887) only portions were written.—Other works: For ch. and orch. The Defeat of Sennacherib (1867), Jesus Narin (1877), and a chorus from Œdipus; for orch. Intermezzo in modo classico in B m., Scherzo in B, Turkish March, A Night on the Bare Mountain (symph. fantasy); pf.-pcs. (Pictures from the Exhibition [10 sketches], On the Southern Shore of the Crimea, Méditation, Une Larme, etc.).—BIBLIOGRAPHY: V. Baskin, *M. P. Nie'mann, Albert, renowned dram. tenor; b. Erxleben, n. Magdeburg, Jan. 15, 1831; d. Berlin, Feb. 6, 1917. Endowed with a good natural voice, he appeared at Dessau (1849) in minor rôles, and sang in the chorus; he was then taken in hand by F. Schneider and the baritone Nusch; after this training he sang at Hanover, then went to study under Duprez at Paris, sang with good fortune at Halle and other towns, and was eng. at Hanover as dram. tenor 1860–6; from then, until his retirement in 1889, at the court opera in Berlin. Wagner eng. him to create the rôles of Tannhäuser at Paris, 1861, and Siegmund at Bayreuth, 1876. During the season of 1886–8 he was a member of the M. O. Although he was then no longer in his prime, and his voice was worn, he made a tremendous impression, for 'he took possession of the stage like an elemental force'; after more than a quarter of a century his marvelous impersonation of the Wagner heroes is not yet forgotten, and his name is inseparably linked with those of Seidl, Lehmann, Brandt, Alvary and Fischer for winning the cause of Wagner in America. Above all, he was a grand actor, while his singing was remarkable for distinct enunciation and intense emotionality, rather than sensuous beauty.—Cf. R. Sternfeld, A. N. Eine Monographie (Berlin, 1904).

On July 21, 1882, she made her first appearance in Paris as Marguerite at the Gr. Opéra, and in the same year she married Frederick A. Gower. With him she returned to America and made her Amer. début with Col. Mapleson's company at the Acad. of Music (N. Y.) as Marguerite, Nov. 26, 1883. After that season she retired for a time; in 1885 proceedings begun by her for a separation were suspended on account of Mr. Gower's mysterious disappearance in a balloon. She did not sing in public again till 1887, then appearing at Covent Garden Th., London. She first sang at the M. O. H., New York, 1893, when the company included Melba, Calvé, Eames, the de Reszkés, Plançon. In 1894 she sang Elsa in Bayreuth, and her emphatic success in that part caused her to take up the greater Wagner rôles. After careful study with J. Kniese at Bayreuth she was heard for the first time as Isolde (to de Reszké's Tristan) at the M. O. H. on Nov. 27, 1895, scoring an overwhelming success. From then on she sang chiefly Wagner rôles. With short intermissions she remained at the M. O. H. until 1908, when she began to make extended concert-tours throughout the world, appearing only occasionally in opera; in 1910 she sang Isolde and Brünnhilde in Paris; in 1912, Isolde with the Boston Opera Co. In 1896 she married the Hungarian tenor Zoltan Doeme, from whom she was divorced in 1904; on July 30, 1909, she married the banker George W. Young in London. Nouguès [noo-gäs'], Jean, b. Bordeaux, 1876. He showed remarkable precocity as a composer, having completed an opera, Le Roi du Papagey, before he was 16, and before he had had systematic mus. instruction. After regular study in Paris he prod. his opera Yannha at Bordeaux in 1897. On reaching his majority he came into a considerable fortune, the greater part of which he squandered in a few years, during which he did nothing with his music beyond retouching his early opera (Bordeaux, 1901). The next two operas, Thamyris (Bordeaux, 1904) and La Mort de Tintagiles (Paris, 1905), were brought out without much success; but after the production of his spectacular Quo Vadis (text by H. Cain after Sienkiewicz' novel; Nice, Feb. 9, 1909) he found himself suddenly famous. The work was given the same year at the Th.-Lyrique in Paris (Nov. 26); in 1911 it was given in Philadelphia (Mar. 25), New York (Apr. 4), Milan (May 3), and London (Nov. 14). His other works Nourrit [noo-rē], Adolphe, celebrated dramatic tenor; b. Paris, Mar. 3, 1802; d. Naples, Mar. 8, 1839. Trained by Garcia, who persuaded his father to let him become a singer, his début at the Grand Opéra (1821), as Pylades in Gluck's Iphigénie en Tauride, was successful. In 1825 he succeeded his father (Louis N., 1780–1831) as leading tenor; he resigned in 1837 because Duprez was associated with him for the interpretation of principal rôles. This fancied slight so preyed upon his spirits that, in spite of warm receptions on a tour through Belgium, southern France, and Italy, he threw himself out of a window after singing at a benefit-concert in Naples. He was an exceptionally endowed singer, an excellent teacher (in the Paris Cons. for ten years), and a comp. of talent (ballets La Sylphide, La Tempête, Le Diable boiteux, l'Île des pirates, etc., written for the Taglioni and Fanny Elssler). The rôles of Robert, Masaniello, Arnold, Eléazar, Raoul, and many others, were written expressly for Nourrit.—Cf. M. L. Quicherat, A. N. Sa vie . . . (3 vols., Paris, 1867); É. Boutet de Monvel, Un artiste d'autrefois. A. N. Sa vie et sa correspondance (2 vols., ib., 1903).

No'váček [nŏh'vah-chĕhk], Ottokar (Eugen), talented violinist and composer; b. Fehértemplom (Ungarisch-Weisskirchen) in Hungary, May 13, 1866; d. New York, Feb. 3, 1900. Pupil of his father, Martin Jos. N., and up to 1880 played often in public; 1880–3, pupil of Dont in Vienna; then studied in the Leipzig Cons. under Schradieck and Brodsky, graduating 1885 with the Mendelssohn prize. He also played in the Gewandhaus, and joined the Brodsky Quartet as 2d violin (later viola). In 1890 his E minor quartet (No. 1) was produced by them. Next year he entered the Boston Symphony Orch. (under Nikisch); from 1892–3 he was solo viola in the Damrosch Orch., New York, and likewise in the revived Brodsky Quartet; also a member for a time of the Metropolitan Opera House orchestra. About 1899 weakness of the heart caused his retirement, but he still composed zealously till shortly before his decease. His works show great originality in form and conception; yet, new and bold as his harmonic schemes appear, they are naturally and logically developed from the underlying ideas. The instrumentation abounds in strikingly novel effects.—Publ. works: Three remarkable string-quartets, No. 1, E minor, No. 2, E♭, No. 3, C (posthumous); concerto f. pf. (played by Busoni); 2 Concert Caprices f. pf.; 8 ditto f. vln. w. pf.; Bulgarian Dances f. vln. w. pf.; Perpetuum mobile f. vln. w. orch.; Air f. vln. w. pf.; 6 Songs (Tolstoi).

At the age of 4 she began to play by ear; at 7 she was placed under Prof. Chiafarelli in São Paulo, under whom her progress was so rapid that in 1904 she was exhibited as a prodigy; for the next 5 years she cont. her studies, but also made frequent appearances in public. In 1909 she entered the competition for a scholarship at the Paris Cons., winning the first place, over 380 rivals, with her performance of Chopin's Ballade in A♭ and Schumann's Carnaval; st. there for 2 years with I. Philipp, graduating in 1911 as winner of the 1st prize; the same year, highly successful début in Paris; until 1913 she toured France, Germany, England, Italy and Switzerland; then appeared in São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro. At her début in the U. S. (New York, Nov. 11, 1915) she made a deep impression, less through her transcendent technic than through a maturity of conception far beyond her years; her second tour of 1916–17, when she was heard also with orch., heightened admiration for her talent.

Novák [nŏh'vahk], Vitězslav, b. Kamenitz, Bohemia, Dec. 5, 1870. St. under Jiránek, Stecker and Dvořák at the Prague Cons. Living in Prague as state examiner for music in intermediate schools, and since 1909 as prof. of comp. at the Cons. His earlier works show the influence of German romanticism, but later he became one of the foremost exponents of nationalism.—Works: The opera The Sprite of the Castle (Prague, 1915); for orch.: Op. 18, Marysa, dramatic overture; op. 26, In der Tatra, symph. poem; op. 33, Von ewiger Sehnsucht, do.; op. 36, Serenade; op. 40, Toman und die Waldfee (symph. poem); op. 42, Der Sturm f. soli, ch. and orch.; Die Totenbraut, do.; op. 1, pf.-trio in G m.; op. 7, pf.-quartet in C m.; op. 12, pf.-quintet in A m.; op. 22, str.-quartet in G; op. 27, Trio quasi una ballata, in D m.; op. 35, str.-quartet in D. The following year he acquired the business of Ewer & Co., and in 1867 changed the name of the firm to 'Novello, Ewer & Co.' Th. Nisard, St.-O. de C. (Paris, 1866); H. Riemann, Geschichte der Musiktheorie (Leipzig, 1898).

Since 1894 he has been prof. at the Univ. of Leipzig. Besides numerous other scientific works, he publ. Das Harmoniesystem in dualer Entwickelung (1866; 2d, rev. ed. as Das duale Harmoniesystem, 1913), reconciling and developing the systems of Helmholtz and Hauptmann. Thürlings, Hostinsky and Hugo Riemann are among his followers.

Of'fenbach, Jacques, the creator of French burlesque opera; b. Cologne, June 21, 1819; d. Paris, Oct. 5, 1880. The son of a Jewish cantor, he came early to Paris; attended Vaslin's 'cello-class for a year (1833–4) in the Cons., then joining the Opéra-Comique orch., playing beside Seligmann. Soon appeared chansonnettes (on parodies of La Fontaine); he also played the 'cello in concerts, and wrote 'cello-duets and pieces for pf. and 'cello. In 1849 he became cond. at the Théâtre Français, where his really fine Chanson de Fortunio (in de Musset's Chandelier) made a hit. His 1-act operetta Pepito (Op.-Com., 1853) made slight impression; but he prod. one operetta after another, and in 1855 ventured to open a theatre of his own, the Bouffes-Parisiens (the old Théâtre Comte, in the Passage Choiseul), which he carried on until 1866, producing many of his most popular pieces. From 1872–6 he was manager of the Théâtre de la Gaîté; turned it over to Vicentini, and in 1877 undertook a not wholly successful tour in America (described in his Notes d'un musicien en voyage, 1877). Returning, he continued composing industriously until death. In the intervals of theatrical management, he brought out operettas on other stages—the Variétés, Palais Royal, and even the Opéra-Comique; his ballet-pantomime Le Papillon was prod. at the Opéra in 1860 with some success. Such was the vogue his works enjoyed that within 6 months after his death three works were prod. posthumously: La belle Lurette (Th. de la Ren., Oct. 30, 1880), Les Contes d'Hoffmann (Op.-Com., Feb. 10, 1881), Mlle. Moucheron (Th. de la Ren., May 10, 1881). Another posth. opera, Myriame et Daphné, was prod. at Monte Carlo in 1907, while as late as 1913 L. Schmidt brought out in Frankfort an operetta, Der Bogen des Odysseus, with music selected from older operettas and unpubl. MSS. of O. Of these posth. works Les Contes d'Hoffmann, really a grand opera, and the composer's favorite, achieved unusual success; since its first Amer. production (1907) it has become a decided favorite in the U. S. In his best works (Orphée aux enfers, 1858, La belle Hélène, 1864; Barbe-Bleue and La vie parisienne, 1866; La grande duchesse de Gérolstein, 1867; Madame Favart, 1879), the music happily follows the extravagant burlesque of the situations; the orchestration is clever, and the melodic vein inexhaustible (though his melody is often trivial and vulgar); the whole is seasoned with a sprightly and ironic humor wholly in keeping with the subjects musically illustrated. He certainly 'knew his public'; his stage-works (102 in number) were all the rage at the time, and many are still played in Paris and elsewhere. They even possess a certain historical interest as being a fairly accurate reflex of French life under the Second Empire.—Cf. E. de Mirecourt, O. (Paris, 1867); A. Martinet, J. O. (ib., 1887); H. Berlioz, Les Musiciens et la Musique (ed. by A. Hallays, Paris, 1903); P. Bekker, J. O. (Berlin, 1909).

Forkel, Kiesewetter, Rochlitz and Ambros gave fragments of the mass Cujusvis toni (ad omnem tonum), a MS. copy of which is in Munich; Ambros prints an enigmatical canon; in Bellermann's 'Contrapunkt' is a fragment of the Missa prolationum.—Cf. Pa'chelbel, Johann, influential organist; b. Nuremberg [bapt. Sept. 1], 1653; d. there Mar. 3, 1706. A pupil of Schwemmer, studying further at Altdorf and Ratisbon; organist at Vienna, 1674; court org. at Eisenach, 1677; of the Predigerkirche at Erfurt, 1678; court org. at Stuttgart, 1690; at Gotha, 1692. Org. at St. Sebald's, Nuremberg, 1695. This varied experience is reflected in his organ-works; his chaconnes, toccatas, and arrs. of chorals, are fluently and easily written, much in J. S. Bach's style. Comparatively little was printed during his life, but a great number of his works are preserved in MS. in various libraries.—Several organ-pieces are printed by Commer in 'Musica sacra,' vol. i; others by G. W. Körner in 'Der Orgelvirtuose,' and in vol. i of a projected, but unfinished, complete ed. of P.'s works; by Winterfeld in 'Evang. Kirchengesang, vol. ii; and a chaconne w. 13 vars., a fugue, and a fughetta (all for pf., i. e., clavichord), by Trautwein (Berlin, 1860); H. Botstiber and M. Seiffert publ. 94 fugues on the Magnificat in 'Dkm. der Tonk. in Österreich' (vol. viii, 2; with biogr.); M. Seiffert ed. Hexachordon Apollinis, 4 arias w. vars., Musikalische Sterbensgedanken, 6 chaconnes, 4 fantasies, 19 suites, and 7 fugues in 'Dkm. der Tonk. in Bayern' (vol. ii, 1; with introd. and biogr. by A. Vergnügen* (1725; prelude, fugue, and fantasia for organ or clavichord); also a prelude and fugue in C; all reprinted by M. Seiffert in 'Dkm. der Tonk. in Bayern' (vol. ii, 1; as supplem. to his father's works).

Pach'er, Joseph Adalbert, b. Daubrawitz, Moravia, Mar. 29, 1816; d. Gmunden, Sept. 3, 1871. Pupil of G. Preyer and A. Halm; lived in Vienna as a comp. of favorite salon-pieces for pianoforte; also publ. an elaborate pf.-method, Der Pianist der guten Schule (op. 75; 9 books).

Pach'ler-Ko'schak, Marie Leopoldine, fine pianist; b. Graz, Oct. 2, 1792; d. there April 10, 1855. She was an enthusiastic admirer of Beethoven, who wrote to her in 1817: 'I have found no one, not excepting the great pianists, who interprets my compositions as well as you.' In 1816 she married Dr. Karl Pachler, a lawyer in Graz. Her son Faust P. publ. Beethoven und M. P.-K. (Berlin, 1865), which contains valuable details concerning B.'s last days.

Pach'mann, Vladimir de, brilliant pianist; b. Odessa, July 27, 1848. Pupil of his father [prof. at Vienna Univ. and a good violinist], and from 1866 of Dachs at the Cons. Although he met with considerable success on his first concert-tour of Russia (1869), he was not satisfied, but retired for 8 years; in 1877 he played in Berlin, Leipzig, and other German cities. After another period of retirement he reappeared in Vienna and Paris in 1880, creating a veritable furore; since then he has made phenomenally successful tours of all Europe and America (first visit 1891); his official Amer. farewell 'for all time' took place in New York on Apr. 13, 1912; since then, however, he has been playing with undiminished success in London, the scene of his greatest triumphs. In 1885, on his tour of Denmark, he was made Knight of the Order of Danebrog; in 1916 the London Philh. Soc. awarded him the much-coveted Beethoven medal. In 1884 he married his former pupil, Maggie Oakey, a fine pianist, who accompanied him on his first Amer. tour, and who was also heard in her own recitals; about 1895 she obtained a divorce, and later married the famous French lawyer, Fernand Labori; in 1913 her opera Yato was prod. in Paris.—De P. is a player of a highly poetic temperament, refined sensibilities, and extraordinary personal magnetism. He is at his best in works demanding extreme delicacy of touch, for there he can legitimately display his marvellous velvety tone and ethereal pianissimo. In this respect he probably never had a superior, and certainly very few equals. Unfortunately he has allowed this quality to influence his entire scale of dynamics to such an extent that even in tremendous works demanding powerful climaxes he never rises above a moderate forte. This, perhaps, is one of the reasons—aside from his decided preference for the romantic composers—why his interpretations of Bach and Beethoven have been neither stirring nor convincing. For many years he had been generally regarded as a peerless Chopin player, as if the interpretation of that master's works required only a poetic conception, exquisite tonal shading, grace and delicacy of execution. As a matter of fact, P. never compassed the heights and depths of the stately Polonaises, the impetuous Ballades, the titanic Scherzi. From the very beginning of his career P. was eccentric, indulging in undignified grimaces, gestures, and audible comments—a bad habit in which he became more and more confirmed with advancing years. This lack of self-control often rendered his playing capricious, unfitted him completely for the performance of chamber-music, and seriously impaired his performances with orchestra. He himself admitted his inability to coördinate himself with others, and for this reason his appearances with orchestra have been very rare during the last 15 years.

Pachulsky [păh-hŏŏl′skē], Heinrich, Russian pianist; b. Lasa, Govt. of Sedletz, Oct. 16, 1859. Pupil of Strobl and Zelenski at Warsaw; of Tanéiev (comp.), N. Rubinstein and Pabst at the Moscow Cons., where he has taught since 1886.—Works: An orchl. suite, op. 13; Marche solennelle, op. 15, for orch.; fantasia for pf. with orch., op. 17; concert-studies for pf., op. 7; 12 Preludes, op. 8, 21, 22, 29; 2 pf.-sonatas, op. 10, 27; Phantastische Märchen, op. 12; etc.; fine pf.-arrangements of Tchaikovsky's orchestral works; soli for various instruments; songs.

Pacini [păh-chē′nē], Antonio Francesco Gaetano Saverio; b. Naples, July 7, 1778; d. Paris, Mar. 10, 1866. Pupil of the Cons. della Pietà, Naples; singing-teacher in that city, then for a time m. de chap. at Nîmes; went to Paris in 1804, prod. some comic operas, and finally founded a music-publishing business, a specialty of which was contemporary Italian operas.

Paci′ni, Giovanni, opera-composer; b. Catania, Feb. 17, 1796; d. Pescia, Dec. 6, 1867. Pupil of Marchesi and Padre Mattei at Bologna, and of Furlanetto at Venice; first opera was Annetta e Lucinda (Th. of Santa Radegonda, Venice, 1813); up to 1835 he had prod. over 40 operas on various Italian stages, when the failure of Carlo di Borgogna at Venice temporarily checked the flow of dramatic composition; he went to Viareggio, near Lucca, and established a very successful school of music there, for which he wrote several short treatises: Corso teoretico-pratico di lezioni di armonia, Principî elementari col metodo pel meloplasto, Memoria sul migliore indirizzo degli studî musicali (1863), Cenni storici sulla musica e trattato di contrappunto (1864), and built a private theatre. Later he removed the school to Lucca. In 1840 P., who prided himself on rapid work, wrote his dramatic masterpiece, Saffo, in 28 days; its reception at Naples on Nov. 29 was enthusiastic. Forty more operas followed up to 1867; the best were Medea (Palermo, 1843), La regina di Cipro (Turin, 1846), and Nicolò de' Lapi (Rio de Janeiro, 1855). This indefatigable composer also prod. numerous oratorios, cantatas, masses, etc.; Dante symphony; an octet; 6 string-quartets; other chamber-music; vocal duets and arias; he was an active contributor to several mus. papers; and publ. memoirs, Le mie memorie artistiche (Florence, 1865; enlarged by Cicconetti, 1872; rev. by F. Magnani, 1875).—Cf. Anon., G. P. (Pescia, 1896).—His brother, Emilio Pacini, b. 1810; d. Neuilly, n. Paris, Dec. 2, 1898, was a distinguished librettist: Il Trovatore was from his pen.

Pacius [pah′s′yŏŏs], Friedrich, fine violinist, pupil of Spohr; b. Hamburg, Mar. 19, 1809; d. Helsingfors, Jan. 9, 1891, where he has been mus. dir. at the Univ. from 1834. In 1835 he organized a choral society, and in 1845 he established regular symphony concerts, which made Helsingfors the musical centre of Finland. He introduced the works of the German classic and romantic masters, and in his own compositions laid the foundations of the national Finnish school. In 1852 his opera Kung Karls jakt, the first Finnish opera, was prod. at Helsingfors, and received with immense enthusiasm. In recognition of his services he was made Knight of the Order of Vasa in 1856, Prof. in 1860, and Dr. phil. (hon. c.) in 1877. Many of his songs (Finland's Song, Our Land, The Soldier-boy, etc.) have become genuine folk-songs. He also wrote a second opera, Loreley (on Geibel's text; Helsingfors, 1887); incid. music to Topelius's Prinsessan af Cypern (1860); a fantasy for vl. and orch.; a vl.-concerto; male and mixed choruses.

Paderewski [-reff′skē], Ignace Jan, b. Kurilovka, Podolia (Russian Poland), Nov. 6, 1860. His father was a gentleman farmer, and the boy grew up in the country until his twelfth year. At the age of 3 he received his first lessons on the pf. from his mother; after her early death, in 1865, he had some further instruction from an old itinerant fiddler, who visited the little town at irregular intervals. In 1867 Pierre Sowinski was engaged as teacher, and from him the boy learned a few operatic airs. Systematic study was not begun until 1872, when he ent. the Warsaw Cons., studying pf. with Janotha (the father of Natalie J.) and comp. with Roguski. In 1876 he made a tour of some of the smaller towns of Russia. At the conclusion of the tour, about which no details have been recorded, the young man returned to the Cons. for further study. In 1878 he was app. instr. in pf. there, remaining 4 years; in 1882 he went to Berlin, where he st. comp. with F. Kiel and H. Urban. In 1883 he became instr. at the Cons. in Strassburg, and there he met his famous countrywoman, Mme. Modjeska, whose admiration of his playing finally decided him to abandon teaching for the career of the virtuoso. Accordingly, he went to Vienna to Leschetizky in 1884, and after 3 years of hard work with that master and Annette Essipov (at that time L.'s wife) made his début with considerable success in Vienna in 1887. The next year he gave his first recital in Paris, where Lamoureux heard him, and immediately engaged him as soloist for one of his orchl. concerts, at which P.'s playing created nothing less than a sensation. Shortly after that he was signally honored by an invitation to appear at one of the 'Concerts du Cons.' His English début took place in London on May 9, 1890, his Amer. début in New York on Nov. 17, 1891, and in both countries the first season sufficed to bring public and critics to his feet. The conquest of Germany was somewhat more difficult, for at his début with the Berlin Philh. Soc. (Bülow) he won only the public, while the critics reserved their judgment; but after his appearance at the Lower Rhenish Fest. in May, 1894, and in concerts in Dresden and Leipzig, the critics joined the general chorus. Since then his numerous tours of Europe, North and South America, and South Africa have been an uninterrupted succession of triumphs. In 1909 he accepted the directorship of the Warsaw Cons. No other instrumentalist, not even Paganini or Liszt, has earned such fabulous sums of money. In 1898 he bought the beautiful Chalet de Riond-Bosson on Lake Geneva, near Morges, where he spends his time when not on tour. Before fortune began to smile upon him P. had passed through the school of adversity. The years in Warsaw were one struggle against poverty. In 1879 he married a poor Polish girl, who died the following year. In 1899 P. married the baroness Helene von Rosen. An outstanding trait of the artist is his ardent patriotism. In the year of the Chopin centenary (1910) he donated $60,000 to the Chopin Memorial Hall in Warsaw, and in the same year he unveiled a colossal stutue of King Jagello (founder of the Polish dynasty), which he had erected at a cost of $100,000.

All who have ever heard P. play admit that he exerts a peculiar fascination. Dr. William Mason wrote as early as 1893: "It seems to me that in the matter of touch P. is as near perfection as any pianist I ever heard, while in other respects he stands more nearly on a plane with Liszt than any other virtuoso since Tausig. His conception of Beethoven combines the emotional with the intellectual in admirable poise and proportion. Thus he plays with a big, warm heart as well as with a clear, calm, discriminative head. . . . In musical conception he is so objective a player as to be faithful, true, and loving to his author, but withal he has a spice of the subjective, which imparts to his performance just the right amount of his own individuality. . . . It is the undefinable poetic haze with which P. invests and surrounds all that he plays which renders him so unique and impressive among modern pianists."

P. began to compose in his seventh year, and his earliest ambition—and one that has never left him—was to win laurels as a composer. Posterity, however, will remember him rather as one of the supreme pianists of the world.—Works: Op. 1, Zwei Klavierstücke; op. 3, Krakowiak for pf.; op. 4, Elegie for pf.; op. 5, Danses polonaises, for pf.; op. 6, Introd. et toccata for pf.; op. 7, 4 songs (German and Polish); op. 8, Chants du voyageur for pf.; op. 9, Danses polonaises for pf.; op. 10, Album de mai, scènes polon., for pf.; op. 11, Vars. and fugue on orig. theme, for pf.; op. 13, sonata for vln. and pf.; op. 14, Humoresques de concert for pf.; op. 15, Dans le désert, toccata for pf.; op. 16, Miscellanea for pf.; op. 17, pf.-concerto in A m.; op. 18, 6 songs with pf.; op. 19, Fantaisie polonaise on orig. themes, for pf. with orch.; op. 20, Légende No. 2, for pf.; op. 21, sonata in E♭ m. for pf.; op. 22 [?]; op. 23, Variations et Fugue for pf.; op. 24, Symphony in B m. His opera Manru was prod. in Dresden, May 29, 1901 (N. Y., Feb. 14, 1902); a second opera, Sakuntala, has not been perf.—Cf. H. T. Finck, P. and his Art (New York, 1895); E. A. Baughan, I. J. P. (London, 1907); J. C. Hadden, Modern Musicians (Boston, 1913).

The Paderewski Fund. After his American tour of 1895–6, P. established a cash fund of $10,000 (orig. trustees were Wm. Steinway, Major H. L. Higginson, and Dr. Wm. Mason), the interest to be devoted to triennial prizes 'to composers of American birth without distinction as to age or religion'; 1. $500 for best orchl. work in symphonic form; 2. $300 for best composition for solo instr. w. orch.; 3. $200 for best chamber-music work. Mr. Steinway added $1500 for prizes, to institute the first competition in 1897.

Padilla [pah-dil'yah], Lola Artôt de, fine dramatic soprano; daughter of Mariano P.; b. Sèvres, n. Paris, Oct. 5, 1885, and trained solely by her mother, Désirée Artôt. After singing in salons and concerts, she was eng.

by Albert Carré for the Opéra-Comique in 1903. Later made grand tour as concert-singer through Russia, England, Scandinavia, Germany, Switzerland, etc.; sang Mignon as star at Wiesbaden; engaged at the Komische Oper, Berlin, 1905–8, as prima donna (début, as Mimi, instant success); since 1909 at the Royal Opera, Berlin. A highly esteemed Mozart singer (Countess and Cherubin in Figaro, Zerlina, Papagena), her own preference is for modern character-rôles (Lotte, Mignon, Juliette, Micaëla, Die Gänsemagd, though Zerlina and Cherubin are also favorites; other rôles are Mallika (Lakmé), Vrenchen, Marie (Verk. Braut), Oscar (Ballo in Maschera), Urbain (Huguenots), Rosalba [Pizzi], Episna (Poia, by Nevin), Prince Orlowsky (Fledermaus), Lola (Cav. Rusticana), etc. Her full, velvety mezzo-soprano has a compass from f to f^3 (3 octaves), the usual range being b-d^3. Her impersonations are highly dramatic; she is likewise an excellent Lieder-singer. She has created the rôles of Vrenchen (in Romeo u. Julia auf dem Dorfe, by Delius; 1907), Rosalba (1908), Episna (1910), and the Gänsemagd at the first Berlin perf. of Königskinder (Jan. 14, 1911).

Pa'dilla y Ra'mos, Mariano, baritone opera-singer; b. Murcia, Spain, 1842; d. Auteuil, n. Paris, Nov. 23, 1906. Pupil of Mabellini at Florence; début at Messina; sang in Turin, Milan, etc., Madrid, Petrograd, Vienna and Berlin. Married Désirée Artôt in 1869.

Paër [päh-är'], Ferdinando, dramatic comp.; born Parma, June 1, 1771; d. Paris, May 3, 1839. A pupil of the violinist Ghiretti, he gave up study for operatic composition, bringing out La Locanda dei vagabondi at Parma in 1789, and I Pretendenti burlati (1790), after which he was called to Venice as theatre-cond., and wrote several operas in the light and melodious style of Cimarosa, Paisiello, etc. In Vienna, 1797–1802, his style, doubtless influenced by Mozart's masterpieces, underwent a change, both harmony and orchestration showing increased variety and fullness; Camilla, ossia il sotterraneo (1799) is considered his best opera. P. succeeded Naumann as court Kapellm. at Dresden in 1802; Eleanora, ossia l'amore conjugale (1805) is identical in subject with Beethoven's Fidelio. In 1807 he went to Paris, becoming maître de chapelle to Napoleon, and conductor of the Opéra-Comique; later (1812) he succeeded Spontini at the Th. Italien, where he remained, through the vicissitudes of the Catalini's domination, and the joint-conductorship of Rossini (1824-6), his successful rival on the stage, until his forced resignation in 1827 (he was held to blame for the poor financial condition of the theatre). In 1828 he received the cross of the Legion of Honor; was elected to the Académie in 1831; and in 1832 was app. cond. of the royal chamber-music. His 43 operas have disappeared from public view; he also wrote 2 oratorios and a Passion, 10 cantatas, and much other vocal music; a Symphonie bacchante, and vars. on Vive Henri IV, for full orch.; 4 grand military marches; 6 waltzes for wind-band; 3 grand sonatas for pf., violin obbl., and 'cello ad lib.; a fantasia for pf., 2 flutes, 2 horns, and bassoon; many pf.-variations.—Cf. T. Massé and A. Deschamps, P. et Rossini (Paris, 1820); C. de Colobrano, Funérailles de F. P. (ib., 1839).—See Q.-Lex.

Pagani'ni, Niccolò, most famous of violin-virtuosi; b. Genoa, Oct. 27, 1782; d. Nice, May 27, 1840. His father, a poor shopkeeper with little musical knowledge, but loving the art, taught him to play on the mandolin, and then procured abler teachers for his gifted son; under G. Servetto, and after him the maestro di cappella G. Costa, Niccolò's progress in violin-playing was rapid; at 8 he comp. a sonata for violin; in 1793 he appeared in public; and from 1795 he studied with Ghiretti and Aless. Rolla at Parma, but soon surpassed his instructors. His career as an independent virtuoso dates from 1798, when he ran away from his father after a concert at Lucca, and made a tour by himself to Pisa and other places. Though only 16, he was passionately fond of gambling, and addicted to all forms of dissipation; at Leghorn he had to part with his violin to pay a gambling debt, but a M. Levron lent him a fine Joseph Guarnerius, and was so charmed with his playing that he made him a present of it. (P. left it by will to the city of Genoa; it may be seen in the Municipal Building, where it is kept under glass.) In 1804 he went home, and spent a year in assiduous practice; set out again on his travels in 1805, arousing unbounded enthusiasm; was soon app. court solo violinist at Lucca (where his novel performances on the G-string began), and stayed there until 1808; then up to 1827 he travelled throughout Italy, his renown spreading from year to year, and his vast technical resources maturing and augmenting so that victory over would-be rivals (Lafont at Milan, 1816, and Lipinski at Piacenza, 1817) was easy. Leaving Italy for the first time in 1828, his opening concert at Vienna was an unparalleled triumph; from the municipality he received the great gold medal of St. Salvator; from the Emperor the (honorary) title of court virtuoso. He reached Berlin in March, 1829, Paris in March, 1831; and played for the first time in London on June 3, 1831. Within a year he accumulated a fortune in Britain. The winter of 1833–4 was passed in Paris; he then retired for a time to his villa at Parma, though often visiting Paris; his health had already begun to fail seriously, as a result of life-long dissipation and excitement. He spent the winter of 1838 in Paris, where his chief disorder, laryngeal phthisis, was aggravated by the climate and by chagrin at financial losses; he lived for several months at Marseilles with a friend, but finding no relief, repaired to Nice for the winter, and died there the following spring.—As a soloist, P. was the most wonderful and original of violin-players. His stupendous technique (in double-stops, left-hand pizzicato, staccato, harmonics), great power and perfect control of tone, the romantic passion and intense energy of his style, quite apart from his personal eccentricities (which were numberless) and mere tricks of virtuosity (such as tuning up the A-string by a semitone or playing the Witches' Dance on one string after severing the other three on the stage, in sight of the audience, with a pair of scissors), made him the marvel of his time. He never controlled his individuality so far as to become even a good quartet-player; he was an artist quite sui generis, whose dazzling genius held his audiences spell-bound, and impressed musicians and amateurs alike. That such gifts could be united with the most sordid avarice and unbridled sensuality, is a fact requiring no further comment here; it aids in explaining the small number and ephemeral character of his compositions.—Works: 24 Capriccî per violino solo (op. 1; pf.-transcriptions by Schumann and Liszt); 6 Sonate per violino e chitarra (op. 2); do. (op. 3); 3 gran quartetti a violino, viola, chitarra e violoncello (op. 4, 5); Concerto in E♭ (solo part written in D, for a violin tuned a semitone higher) (op. 6); Concerto in B m., La Campanella, w. Paisiel'lo, Giovanni, famous dram. comp.; b. Taranto, Italy, May 9, 1741; d. Naples, June 5, 1816. From the age of 5 he studied at the Jesuit school in Taranto, where he was taught by a priest, Resta, and where his singing so delighted Guaducci, maestro at the Capuchin church, that he advised his father to place him in the Cons. di S. Onofrio at Naples. Here he studied under Durante, Cotumacci, and Abos, from 1754–59, remaining 4 years longer as a teacher, and occupying himself with sacred composition (masses, oratorios, etc.). But a comic intermezzo perf. at the Cons. theatre in 1763, discovered such dramatic talent, that he was commissioned to write an opera for the Marsigli Th. at Bologna; here his first comic opera was prod., La Pupilla, ossia Il Mondo alla rovescia (1764). For 12 years, during which he brought out no less than 50 operas, his successes were many, and reverses few, even in rivalry with Piccinni and Cimarosa; though he did not scruple to win his triumphs by the aid of low trickery and intrigues prompted by artistic jealousy. Important works of this period are Il Marchese di Tulipano (Rome, 1766), L'Idolo cinese (Naples, 1767; Paris, Acad. R. de Mus. 1779), and La Serva padrona (Naples, 1769). Invited to Petrograd by Empress Catherine in 1776, he lived there 8 years on a princely salary; Il Barbiere di Siviglia, given at P. in 1776, was the first opera with that title, and so charmed the Romans that Rossini's masterpiece was not even allowed a hearing at its initial performance. During the next 15 years he acted as maestro di cappella to Ferdinand IV of Naples (1784–99); L'Olimpiade (1786), and Nina, o La Pazza per amore (1789, a charming 'opera semiseria,' a genre in which Paisiello excelled), La Molinara, and I Zingari in fiera, are especially noteworthy. During the revolutionary period of 1799–1801 P. stood well with the republican government, but lost the favor of the King, together with his place and salary. From 1802–3 he was Napoleon's maître de chapelle at Paris, and a favorite of the First Consul, who preferred his music to Cherubini's. From 1803 to the Bourbon restoration of 1815, he held his former position at Naples, and other places of importance, all of which latter he lost on Ferdinand's return in 1815, being retained solely as maestro di cappella in recognition of his eminent abilities.—P. was an extraordinarily productive composer, and one of the most popular of his time; yet of his 100 or more operas only La Serva padrona and possibly one or two others are ever played nowadays. His vein of melody was original, fresh, and natural; although he introduced instrumental effects that were novel in Italy, he carefully avoided the overelaborate vocal numbers common to the period, obtaining his effect by the grace, beauty, and dramatic truthfulness of his melody. Seven operas were printed: Il Marchese di Tulipano, La Serva padrona, Il Barbiere, Il re Teodoro, La Molinara, Nina, and Proserpine.—Church-music: A Passion oratorio (Warsaw, 1784); 3 solemn masses for double choir and 2 orchestras; Te Deum for do.; Requiem for 4 voices and orch. (perf. at his own funeral); 30 masses for do.; 2 5-part masses; Dixit, Magnificat, Miserere, about 40 motets w. orch.; etc.—12 symphonies; funeral march for Gen. Hoche; 6 pf.-concertos; 12 pf.-quartets; 6 string-quartets; sonata and concerto for harp; 2 vols. of sonatas, caprices, etc., for pf.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: I. E. Arnold, *G. Paladilhe [păh-lăh-dēl'], Émile, b. Montpellier, June 3, 1844. Entered Paris Cons. in 1853; studied under Marmontel (pf.), Benoist (org.), and Halévy (cpt.); 1st prize for pf. and organ, 1857; won the Grand prix de Rome in 1860 with the cantata Le Czar Ivan IV (Opéra, 1860). While in Rome, he sent to the Académie an Italian opera buffa, an overture, and a symphony; returning to Paris, he brought out a number of songs, and in 1872 the 1-act comedy-opera Le Passant, at the Op.-Comique, followed by the 2-act ditto, l'Amour africain (1875), the 3-act do., Suzanne (1878), the 3-act do., Diana (1885), the 5-act opera Patrie! (Opéra, 1886; in Hamburg, 1889, as Vaterland; at La Scala, Milan, 1895, as Patria); and Les Saintes Maries de la mer, a sacred lyric drama (Montpellier, 1892). Has also produced 2 masses, a symphony in E♭, some sacred music, and numerous songs, among which the Mandolinata, Premières pensées, and Mélodies écossaises, are popular. In 1892 he succ. Guiraud as member of the 'Académie.'

Palestri'na, [Giovanni Pierluigi, called da Palestrina,] the greatest composer of the Catholic Church and of the Roman School, was born at Palestrina, n. Rome, 1526; d. at Rome, Feb. 2, 1594. His early life is obscure; the first reliable information we have is that he was organist at his native town 1544–51, in which year he succeeded Rosseli as magister puerorum (master of the boys) in the Cappella Giulia, with the title of 'maestro della cappella della Basilica Vaticana.' His first published work (1554) was a book of masses a 4, dedicated to Pope Julius III, who, recognizing his genius, caused him to be admitted to the Pontifical Chapel as a singer (a gross infraction of the rules, P. being married, and a poor singer) in Jan., 1555. Paul IV, on his accession to the Holy See, dismissed P. with a pension of 6 scudi per month (July 30, 1555); however, on the latter's recovery from a severe illness caused by this blow, the Pope appointed him maestro di cappella at the Lateran (Oct. 1, 1555). In 1560 his famous Improperia for Holy Week attracted such attention, that the Pope (Pius IV) secured them for the Sistine Chapel, where they have since been performed on every Good Friday. In 1561 he exchanged his post for the better-salaried one of maestro at Santa Maria Maggiore. He remained in this church for a decade, during which his fame was firmly established. The scheme of Pope Paul IV for the reform of church-music, laid before the Council of Trent (1545–63), had resulted in the determination by that august body to suppress all distinctly secular elements, and more particularly the canti fermi borrowed by even eminent composers from the melodies of indecent songs; but they hesitated to adopt the more radical features in the Pope's program, especially the abolition of figural song. During further discussion of this matter by the College of Cardinals in 1564, Palestrina was requested to write a mass which, without banishing the beauties of florid melody and polyphonic art, should be in every way appropriate for church-performance. He wrote not one, but three, of which the third, the Missa Papae Marcelli, was so wholly satisfactory that the idea of banishing polyphonic music from the church-service was definitively abandoned, and P. ('the saviour of music') was appointed composer to the Pontifical Chapel, a post of honor held only by himself and Anerio. In 1571 he succeeded Animuccia as maestro of St. Peter's, an office which he retained until his death. He was also interested in Neri's 'Congregazione del Oratorio' as a composer (v. NERI), taught occasionally in Nanini's school, and was 'maestro concertatore' to Prince Buoncompagni from 1581. The desire of Pope Sixtus V to make P. maestro of the Sistine Chapel, was frustrated by the opposition of the singers, who refused to serve under a layman. The revision of the Roman Gradual and Antiphonal, entrusted to P. in 1577 by Pope Gregory XIII, remained unfinished; for representations from Philip II of Spain and the Spanish bishops induced the Pope to abandon the intended revision.—Palestrina's works mark the culmination of the era of strict simple contrapuntal composition in the Gregorian modes; the perfection of a cappella church-music within these limits. Orlandus Lassus and Giovanni Gabrieli approach, but hardly equal him. A monumental edition of his complete compositions has been publ. by Breitkopf & Härtel in 33 volumes (1862–94); vols. i–iii edited by Theodor de Witt and J. N. Rauch; vols. iv–viii by Franz Espagne; vol. ix by Fr. Commer; and vols. x–xxxiii by Fr. X. Haberl. The contents of these volumes is as follows: Vols. i–vii, 179 motets (a 4–12); vols. viii, ix, 113 hymns and offertories (a 4–5); vols. x–xxiv, 93 masses (a 4–8); vol. xxv, 9 lamentations (each in several settings a 4–8); vol. xxvi, 10 litanies, 4 psalms, 2 motets (a 4–12); vol. xxvii, 35 magnificats (a 4–8); vol. xxviii, 83 Ital. secular madrigals (a 3–6); vol. xxix, 56 Ital. sacred madrigals (a 4–6); vols. xxx-xxxii, miscellaneous comps. (many doubtful); vol. xxxiii, index, documents, facsimiles, etc. After the completion of this great edition the same firm began the separate publication of several of the most famous works (in treble and bass clefs). In Waldersee's 'Sammlung musikalischer Vorträge,' No. 52, will be found full information; Br. & H. also publ. a special catalogue. As this

Not only classic music, but the best modern French and foreign authors, had a hearing. P. also taught a vocal ensemble-class at the Cons., 1855–68, and likewise cond. a section of the Orphéons for a time; he unsuccessfully attempted the direction of the Th.-Lyrique, 1868–9, and his popular concerts gradually lost ground in competition with Colonne and Lamoureux, ceasing in 1884. A grand popular mus. festival at the Trocadéro, instituted for his benefit, netted him nearly 100,000 francs.

At first a pupil of Asioli at Milan Cons., she sang without success, after her début in 1815, in Italy, London, and Paris; returned to Italy for further serious study under Scappa, and reappeared at Paris in 1822 as a vocal phenomenon; the compass of her voice was from a to d^3, and in power, dramatic intensity, and truth of expression she had then no rival, though her voice, even in her best days, was not perfectly equalized. In 1829 she had acquired a fortune in London and Paris, and sang but little thereafter (in London 1837 and 1850; in Petrograd 1840; etc.), as her singing rapidly deteriorated. For the Pasta, Bellini wrote La Sonnambula and Norma, Donizetti his Anna Bolena, Pacini his Niobe; she excelled in the leading rôles of the Italian operas then in vogue.

Taught pf. by her sister Carlotta, and singing by her half-brother Ettore Barili; her début was made at New York on Nov. 24, 1859, as Lucia (under the stage-name of 'the little Florinda'). In London she first appeared in La Sonnambula on May 14, 1861, at Covent Garden, her success rivalling that of the Grisi; her Parisian début was in the same rôle, at the Th. Italien, on Nov. 19, 1862. Here she married the Marquis de Caux in 1868, from whom she separated in 1877, and was divorced in 1885. She sang for the first time in Italy at La Scala, Milan, Nov. 3, 1877, Violetta in La Traviata being the rôle selected. She has sung in all the chief towns of Europe, and has everywhere been received with enthusiasm. She retired from the stage in 1895, but continued to appear in concerts, giving an official 'Farewell' concert at Albert Hall, London, on Dec. 1, 1906. She resides for the greater part of the year at her villa, Craig y Nos, in Wales. Her second husband, the tenor Nicolini, whom she married in 1886, died in 1898; she married a Swedish nobleman, Baron Cederström, in 1899. P.'s voice was not powerful; but it had a wide range (c^1-f^3), wonderful flexibility, and perfect evenness throughout; it probably excelled that of any other singer in voluptuous sweetness and bell-like purity. Her vocalization and technical skill were above all criticism, and the ease with which she took the highest notes was astonishing. The combination of these qualities carried the audiences by storm, and established her immense popularity. After 1882 she never sang for less than $5,000 a performance. But besides her glorious voice and stupendous technical skill she had practically nothing; she was no actress, she lacked temperament, and her musical intelligence was ordinary. She was merely a singer, not an interpreter. Her operatic répertoire included about 30 rôles in the operas of Rossini, Bellini, Donizetti, Meyerbeer, Gounod, Auber, and Verdi (earlier works).—Cf. G. de Charnacé, A. P. (Paris, 1868); E. Hanslick, A. P., in Musikalische Stationen (Berlin, 1885).

Her father, Salvatore P., a tenor singer, and her mother, Caterina, née Chiesa, a stage-soprano, were her first teachers in singing; she had piano-lessons with Henri Herz, at Paris. Her early youth was spent in New York. Lameness prevented success on the stage, but she was more fortunate as a concert-singer, making her début in New York, 1861, followed by an American tour with the impresario Ullmann. Here, and in Europe, she became a favorite on the concert-stage, more especially as a coloratura vocalist of exquisite technique united with great sentiment. In 1871 she married the violoncellist Demunck, with whom her artistic tours were continued.

Pe'pusch [pā-], John Christopher [Johann Christoph], b. Berlin, 1667; d. London, July 20, 1752. He had a position at the Prussian court 1681–97; then went to Holland, and thence (1700) to London, joining the Drury Lane orch. as violinist, later as cembalist and composer; from 1707 adapting Italian airs to English operas, adding recitatives and songs. In 1710 he founded (with Needler, Gates, Galliard, and others) the 'Academy of Antient Music,' famous for the revival of 16th-century compositions (P. was deeply versed in mus. lore); 1712, org. and comp. to the Duke of Chandos, preceding Handel; 1713, Mus. In 1724 his scheme for founding a college in the Bermudas with Dr. Berkeley was frustrated by shipwreck. In 1730 a fortune of £10,000, brought him by marriage with the singer Marguerite de l'Épine, rendered him independent. From 1737 till death he was organist of the Charterhouse. P. was a learned, though conservative, musician, and a high authority in England before Handel. He publ. a Treatise on Harmony (1731), the final attempt of the kind to revive solmisation; an essay on the 3 genera of the Greeks is in the 'Philosophical Transactions' of 1746. His odes and cantatas, and the concertos and sonatas for strings and wind, are of slight importance. The Beggar's Opera was repr. by G. Calmus (1912).—See Q.-Lex.

Pergole'si, Giovanni Battista, b. Jesi, Papal States, Jan. 4, 1710; d. Mar. 16, 1736, at Pozzuoli, n. Naples. In 1726 he entered the Cons. dei Poveri di Gesù Cristo at Naples, studying the violin with de Matteis, and counterpoint with Greco, Durante and Feo. His (harmonically) novel improvisations attracted attention; though his last student-work, the biblical drama San Gugliemo d'Aquitania (prod. with comic intermezzi at the convent of S. Agnello Maggiore, Naples, 1731), and the opera Sallustia, the intermezzo Amor fa l'uomo cieco, and the opera seria Ricimero (all Naples, 1731), made little impression. For his patron, the Prince of Stigliano, he wrote 30 terzets for violin with bass; probably through the Prince's influence, he was commissioned to write a solemn mass for Naples, which, performed after the terrible earthquake of 1731 as a votive offering to the patron saint of Naples, rendered the young maestro at once famous in that city. For two years he continued sacred composition, though four stage-works prod. in 1732 showed his leaning toward dramatic writing; with the opera buffa ('intermezzo') La Serva padrona (Naples, 1733; teatro San Bartolomeo) he won immediate and lasting distinction; it is his finest work, and has served as a model for succeeding Italian composers in that genre. (New ed. by H. Abert, 1911.) P. obtained his effects with the simplest means; the string-orch. is his main dependence throughout, being supported in only a few numbers by the horns, and at the finale by the entrance of the trumpet; even the string-accompaniment is sometimes reduced to two parts, the violins playing in octaves, and the viola being reinforced by the 'cello an octave lower. This was his sole real success on the stage; none of the operas written for Naples (Il Maestro di musica, Il Geloso schernito, Lo Frate 'nnamorato, Il Prigionero superbo, Adriano in Siria) received popular approbation; L'Olimpiade (Rome, 1735) did no better; only the intermezzo to Adriano, given at first as Livietta e Tracollo (Naples, 1734), and later, independently, as La Contadina astuta, had a fair measure of success. Flaminio, written in 1735, was first perf. at Naples in 1749. Musicians, far more than the general public, admired P.'s works; while L'Olimpiade was rehearsing, Duni, the composer of the successful opera Nerone, is said to have told P. that his music was too delicately beautiful for appreciation by the vulgar—and so it proved: L'Olimpiade failed utterly, and Nerone was applauded. After P.'s death, his compatriots recognized his genius, and a revival of his operas was enthusiastically welcomed. They were, indeed, new, as fairly beginning the modern era of harmonically (in contradistinction to contrapuntally) accompanied melody.— Repeated disappointments, and irregular habits, undermined his constitution; consumption set in, and he died at the baths of Pozzuoli, working to the last, finishing the pathetically beautiful Stabat Mater five days before the end. It is his best-known sacred work, written for soprano and alto with string-orch. and organ; he also composed 2 masses for 5-part chorus w. orch., and other church-music; an oratorio, La Natività; a cantata, Orfeo, for solo voice and orch.; a cantata a 5, Giasone; 6 cantatas with string-accomp.; and the 30 trios mentioned above; a violin-concerto with string accomp.; and a 'sinfonia'

Of noble family, he studied at Lucca under Cristoforo Malvezzi; was maestro at the court of Ferdinando I and Cosimo II de' Medici, and from 1601 at the court of Ferrara. A member of the distinguished circle at the houses of Count Bardi and Corsi, where the revival of ancient Greek musical declamation was planned, P. set to music Rinuccini's text of Dafne (1597). Encouraged by its success, he composed Rinuccini's Euridice for the wedding of Maria de' Medici with Henry IV of France (prod. Oct. 6, 1600). Dafne was the first 'opera,' or drama set to music in monodic style (i. e., vocal soli supported by instrs.); this style was termed 'stile rappresentativo.' In 1608 P. wrote for Mantua the recitatives of Ariadne (text by Rinuccini), while Monteverdi comp. the arias. In the same year he submitted in Mantua an opera Tetide (text by Cini), which, however, was not prod. With Grazie, Signorini and del Turco he wrote Guerra d'amore (Florence, 1615). No records are available showing that Adone (text by Cicognini), comp. 1620, ever had a public perf. La precedenza delle dame was prod. at Florence in 1625, and P. also collaborated with Gagliano on La Flora (1628). He publ. in 1609 Le varie musiche del Signor Jacopo Peri . . . in 1–3 parts, some to be sung with harpsichord or chitarrone, others to be played on the organ. Kiesewetter printed 3 madrigals a 4 in Schicksale und Beschaffenheit des weltlichen Gesanges (1841). Fragments from Euridice are in several histories of music; a complete ed. was publ. by Guidi in Florence, and by Torchi in vol. vi of 'Arte musicale in Italia.'—Cf. G. O. Dreux, Sept. 7, 1726; d. London, Aug. 31, 1795. Campra was his teacher in music, but chess was for a long time his master-passion, and after vanquishing many celebrated Continental players, he wrote an Analyse du jeu d'échecs, which he publ. in London in 1749, where he commenced a series of victories at the London Chess Club, later receiving a pension from the Club. From 1756 he appeared in the novel and unexpected rôle of a successful composer of comic operas, producing at Paris the 4-act opera Le Diable à quatre (Op.-Com.) and the opera-ballet Le Retour du printemps; these were followed by several one-act pieces (Blaise le savetier, 1759; l'Huitre et les plaideurs, 1759; Le Quiproquo, ou Le Volage fixé, 1760; Le Soldat magicien, 1760; Le Jardinier et son seigneur, 1761); then one of his best, in 2 acts, Le Maréchal ferrant (1761), perf. over 200 times; followed by more one-act pieces (Sancho Pança, 1762; Le Bûcheron, ou Les trois souhaits, 1763). Then came Le Sorcier, 2 acts (1764), and Tom Jones, 3 acts (1764); the latter had, finally, great vogue, and contained a noteworthy novelty, a quartet a cappella. In 1767 appeared his finest effort, the grand opera Ernelinde, princesse de Norvège (revised in 1769 as Sandomir; prince de Danemark). Le Jardinier de Sidon (1768), l'Amant déguisé (1769), La nouvelle école des femmes (1770), Le bon fils (1773), Zémire et Mélide (1773), Berthe (Brussels, 1775, with Gossec and Botson), Les Femmes vengées (1775), Le puits d'amour (1779), Persée (Grand Opéra, 1780), l'Amitié au village (1785), Thémistocle (1786), La belle esclave (1787), and Le Mari comme il les faudrait tous (1788) close the long list. Bélisaire, finished by Berton, was prod. in 1796. P. surpassed his rivals Grétry and Monsigny both in skilfulness of orchestration and richness and correctness of harmony, though their inferior in dramatic expression and melodic charm. He was adored by the Parisians; but his love for chess caused him to forsake them at frequent intervals for their neighbors across the Channel.—P. also wrote church-music; a set of 12 Ariettes périodiques (in alternation with Trial) for vocal solo w. violin, bass, oboe and horn; L'Art de la modulation, quartets for 2 violins, oboe and bass; etc.—Cf. Phillipps, Adelaide, alto dramatic singer; b. Stratford-on-Avon, Engl., 1833; d. Karlsbad, Oct. 3, 1882. The family emigrated to America in 1840, settling in Boston. Taught by her mother, Adelaide appeared as a child-dancer at the Tremont Th., Jan. 12, 1842, and was eng. at the Museum Th., 1843–50, as a dancer and actress. Jenny Lind then started a subscription to enable her to study singing; at first under Garcia in London, and then in Italy. Her début was at the Teatro Carcano, Milan, Dec. 17, 1854, as Rosina. Returning to Boston in 1855, she sang in concerts and English opera; her first American appearance in Italian opera being at the Acad. of Music, New York, Mar. 17, 1856, as Azucena. Her great success won her an engagement for five seasons. She next went to Havana, and thence to Paris (1861), Madrid, Barcelona, Hungary, and Holland, singing leading contralto parts in all the Italian operas then in vogue. Joining the 'Boston Ideal Opera Company' in 1879, she made her last Boston appearance at the Museum on Nov. 30, 1880; and her final stage-appearance at Cincinnati in December, 1881. From 1880 he spent the winters in London and the summers at his villa near Cadenabbia on Lake Como. He combined marvelous technical skill with profound musicianship, and his influence on contemporary 'cellists may well be compared with that of Joachim on violinists.—Works: Op. 18, Concertino for vcl. and orch.; op. 24, concerto for vcl. and orch. accompanist at several minor Parisian theatres; 'chef du chant' at the Opéra 1816–26. His more than 200 operas, melodramas, ballets, etc., require only casual mention.

Piccin'ni, Luigi, son of Nicola; b. Naples, 1766; d. Passy, July 31, 1827. Pupil of his father, with whom he lived in Paris and Naples; 1796–1801, R. conductor at Stockholm. Wrote some 15 French and Italian operas of no special merit, for Paris, Naples, etc.

Piccinni (Piccini, Picinni), Nicola, prolific and celebrated opera-composer; b. Bari, Jan. 16, 1728; d. Passy, n. Paris, May 7, 1800. His father, though a musician, gave him no music-lessons, intending him for the church; but the Bishop of Bari, recognizing the boy's talent, overcame paternal opposition, and at 14 years of age P. entered the Cons. di San Onofrio, Naples, where he studied for 12 years, becoming the favorite pupil of Leo and Durante. His student-compositions were a mass and other church-music. At this time Logroscino's buffo operas ruled the Neapolitan stage; young P. boldly invaded the popular favorite's field, a few months after leaving the Cons., with the opera Le Donne dispettose (Teatro de' Fiorentini, 1754), which was received with acclamation. There followed, in 1755, Gelosia per gelosia and Il Curioso del suo proprio danno; the latter had a run of four years, a thing then unheard of in Italy. His first Roman venture, Alessandro nelle Indie (1758), was also successful, and Cecchina zitella, o La buona figliuola (Rome, 1760) was lauded to the skies as the most perfect of opere buffe; P. wrote it in 3 weeks, and it extorted praise even from Jommelli. Logroscino, who died in 1763, was already outrivalled; the freshness of P.'s melody, the increased dramatic vigor of his duets, and his effective finales (extended to several scenes with corresponding changes in tempo and key) made him the idol of the hour. His productiveness was astounding; in 1762 he brought out no less than six operas, and in the course of his career wrote (on the authority of his friend and biographer Ginguené) 133 dramatic works. This period of triumphant success, to which Il Re pastore (1760), L'Olimpiade (1761; revised, 1771), Berenice (1764), La Cecchina maritata (1765), Didone abbandonata (1767), Antigone (1771), and many others contributed, was rudely interrupted in 1773, when the fickle Roman public turned to the far inferior Anfossi, and hissed one of P.'s operas off the stage. He fell seriously ill on his return to Naples; on recovering, he wrote I Viaggiatori for Naples, and its enthusiastic reception (1776) in some measure consoled him for the previous undeserved failure. Negotiations begun about this time by La Borde, 'valet de chambre' to Louis XV, and author of the Essai sur la musique, to induce P. to visit Paris, were continued in 1775 by the Marquis of Caraccioli by special desire of Marie Antoinette. In consequence of flattering offers, P. removed with his family to Paris in December, 1776. He required an entire year to obtain sufficient mastery of the language to write his first French opera, Roland (Opéra, Paris, Jan. 27, 1778), a mediocre work which probably owed its temporary success as much to partisan intrigue as to its intrinsic value. For as soon as the celebrated Italian maestro reached Paris, the opponents of the innovator Gluck rallied around P. as the standard-bearer of Italian musical taste [melody simply accompanied, in contradistinction to the dramatic declamation and heavier scoring of Gluck's operas]; the controversy between the 'Gluckists' and 'Piccinnists' rose to a pitch of acrimony and animosity inconceivable to the present generation, even after the long (but chiefly 'academical') warfare against Wagner. It is pleasant to note that P. took no part whatever in this quarrel, which his frank and generous nature abhorred. When Gluck died (1787) he endeavored, though vainly, to raise a fund for annual memorial concerts. His own successes were great. In 1778 he was appointed director of the newly engaged Italian opera-troupe, whose performances alternated with those of the French company at the Opéra, and was thus enabled to produce his best Italian scores, meeting his rival on less unequal terms. Unfortunately the management of the Opéra commissioned both Gluck and P. to compose the opera Iphigénie en Tauride at the same time; P. was dissatisfied with his text, and lost time by having it rewritten by Ginguené, so that his version appeared in 1781, the year after Gluck left Paris, and failed utterly in comparison with the German composer's masterpiece. [His successful French operas were Le Fat méprisé (1779), Atys (1780), Didon, Le Dormeur éveillé, and the Le faux Lord (these last 3 in 1783); half a dozen others either failed, or were never performed]. To add to his discomfiture, a new rival, Sacchini, now began successfully to dispute the field of Italian opera; although P.'s French opera Didon (1783) renewed his earlier triumphs. In 1784 he was appointed 'maître de chant' at the new 'École royale de musique et déclamation'; 2 years thereafter, his opera Roland was represented by his pupils there. His last operatic attempts in French were unfortunate. In 1789, at the outbreak of the Revolution, he lost his positions, and retired to Naples, where the King granted him a pension. But because of his daughter's marriage with a young French radical, P. was suspected of republicanism; he was kept a prisoner in his own house for four years, with the added misfortune of extreme poverty, which he alleviated as best he might by the composition and sale of church-music. After the treaty of peace with the French republic (1798), he returned to France, was fêted at the Conservatoire, and received a present of 5,000 francs and a small pension, which was not regularly paid, however. He was prostrated for some months by paralysis; after his recovery, a sixth Inspectorship was created at the Cons. for his benefit, but he soon became ill again, and retired to Passy to die.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: P. In Italy and in Paris (1829) she won great applause on the stage; also sang 1838–48 at Cadiz. Her failure at London was probably due to her unprepossessing appearance, her face being disfigured by the smallpox.

Pistocchi [pĭs-tŏh'kē], Francesco Antonio, founder of the famous School of Singing at Bologna; b. Palermo, 1659; d. Bologna, May 13, 1726. Taken to Bologna very young, his first work was publ. there in 1667: Capriccî puerili saviamente composti e passeggiati in 40 modi sopra un Basso da un balletto, per il clavicembalo ed altri istrumenti, when he was but 8 years old! His teacher in theory was G. A. Perti; he studied singing under Padre Vastamigli and B. Monari. As a lad he became maestro at the church of San Giovanni in Monte; later a priest in the Oratorian order; from 1697–9 was Kapellm. at the court of Ansbach; and returned to Bologna, via Vienna and Venice, about 1700. Here he founded, soon after his return, the first school of music in which vocal instruction was given systematically in the several classes. In this school were trained many eminent singers (Bernacchi, Bertolino da Faenza, Minelli, Pio Fabri, etc.); similar institutions soon sprang up in other Italian cities. P. was twice elected president of the Accad. Filarmonica, in 1708 and 1710. —Works: The operas Narciso (Ansbach, 1697); Le risa di Democrito (Vienna, 1700); and two early works, Leandro (1679) and Il Girello (1681); the oratorios *Il martirio di S. Busi's Il Padre G. B. Martini (Bologna, 1891; vol. i, pp. 142–86).—See also Q.-Lex.

Pito'ni, Giuseppe Ottavio, born Rieti, Italy, March 18, 1657; d. Rome, Feb. 1, 1743. He began mus. studies at 5, under Pompeo Natale in Rome; at 8 was chorister at S. Giovanni de' Fiorentini, later at the S.S. Apostoli, and studying counterpoint under Foggia. In 1673, m. di capp. at Terra di Rotondo; in 1674, at Assisi; in 1676, at Rieti; finally, in 1677, he became maestro di cappella of the Collegio di S. Marco, Rome, retaining this post until death, though simultaneously engaged at San Apollinare (1686), San Lorenzo in Damaso (1686), San Giovanni in Laterano (1708–19), and St. Peter's (1719), also in some minor Roman churches. He was an excellent teacher, and taught after the same method by which he himself rose to eminence as a composer, i.e., the writing out in score of Palestrina's works to study his style;—Durante, Leo and Feo were his greatest pupils. As a composer he cultivated a distinctive feature of the Roman school, the writing in many parts; his finest works are a Dixit a 16 (for 4 choirs), still sung yearly at St. Peter's during Holy Week, and 3 masses based on popular airs, Li pastori a Maremme, Li pastori a Montagna, and Mosca. Of masses and psalms he comp. over 40 a 12 (for 3 choirs) and over 20 a 16 (for 4 choirs), psalms and motets a 24 and 36; and left an unfinished mass a 48. He also wrote for St. Peter's a set of masses, vespers, etc., for the entire year, besides motets a 3–8, hymns, etc. Only one book of motets a 2 was publ. (Rome, 1607) during his lifetime, probably because he insisted that music written for one church should not be perf. in any other. Proske, in his 'Musica divina' (1855, etc.), has printed a mass, a Requiem, 6 motets, a psalm, a hymn, and a Christus factus est. In the Vatican Library is a MS. work by P., Notizie dei maestri di cappella sì di Roma che oltramontani . . . from 1500–1700; and a fragmentary Guida armonica (108 printed pages).—See Q.-Lex.

Entered the Wunderlich Orch. at Leipzig, 1831, as a violinist; later devoted himself to the piano, carefully studying the principles of technique, and teaching; in 1843 Mendelssohn invited him to join the staff of instructors at the Cons., and he taught there until 1865, later giving private lessons in Leipzig. Plançon [plăhn-sŏhn'], Pol (-Henri), famous dramatic basso; b. Fumay, Ardennes, June 12, 1854; d. Paris, Aug. 12, 1914. Destined by his parents for a commercial career, he was sent to a large business in Paris. Upon the advice of the pianist Th. Ritter he began to study singing with Duprez, and later with Sbriglia. His successful début as St.-Bris at Lyons, in 1877, led to a 2 years' eng. there; he was first heard in Paris at the Th. de la Gaîté on Feb. 11, 1880, as Colonna in Duprat's Pétrarque, and subsequently sang with great success at the Lamoureux concerts; after a season at Monte Carlo, highly successful début at the Grand Opéra as Mephistopheles on June 23, 1883. During his ten years' engagement there he sang that rôle over 100 times; it always remained his greatest part, and probably no other singer has equalled P.'s marvelous conception and delivery. On June 3, 1891, he made his London début in the same rôle, and from then until 1904 he appeared at Covent Garden every spring. His Amer. début, likewise as Mephistopheles, took place at the M. O. H. on Nov. 29, 1893. He then resigned from the Paris Opéra, and until his retirement in 1906 remained a member of the New York institution, where he sang with such artists as Melba, Eames, Sembrich, Nordica, the de Reszkés, Maurel and Lablache.—P. possessed an imposing physical appearance, a voice of marvelous volume and rare flexibiltiy, mobile features, and true musical instinct. Although the rôle of Mephistopheles is in some special manner identified with this artist, he was anything but one-sided, as is proved by the variety of his répertoire (about 50 rôles in French, Italian, German and English works) and his phenomenal successes on the concert-platform. He created the rôles of Eustache in Saint-Saëns's Étienne Marcel (1879), François I in the same composer's Ascanio (1890), Garrido in Massenet's La Navarraise (1898), Ariofarne in Mancinelli's Ero e Leandro (1901), the Friar in Stanford's Much Ado about Nothing (1902), the King in Bunning's Princess Osra (1904). In several operas he sang more than one part, as in Roméo et Juliette (Capulet and Friar), Aida (Ramfis and King), Huguenots (St.-Bris, Marcel), etc. Of Wagnerian rôles he sang the Landgrave, King Henry, and Pogner (in German and Italian).

Some of his latest are Surcouf (1887), Le Talisman (1892), Panurge (1895), and a spectacular comic opera in 3 acts, Mam'zelle Quat'sous (Gaîté, 1897). For London he wrote The Old Guard (1887), and Paul Jones (1889). A posth. operetta, Le Paradis de Mahomet (orch. by Louis Ganne) was prod. at the Th. des Var. in 1906.

From 8 he studied singing and the 'cello in the royal school for the 'pages de musique'; afterwards Langlé, Hüllmandel and Petrini were his teachers. From 1797 he was singing-teacher at the Campan Inst. at Saint-Denis, where Hortense de Beauharnais, the future queen of Holland, was his pupil. From 1802 he was prof. of singing at the Cons.; but resigned this position, Queen Hortense calling him to Holland as court conductor, and remained in her service at Paris, after the King's abdication in 1810, until 1815. From 1812–15, P. was also maître de chant and stage-manager at the Opéra; 1816–28, again prof. of singing at the Cons., also succeeding Persuis as maître de chapelle to Louis XVIII. Losing his positions in the revolutionary year 1830, he retired to Batignolles. His most distinguished pupil was Mme. Cinti-Damoreau. Besides half-a-score of operas (Palma and Le Mari de circonstance were publ.), he comp. masses, motets, etc., for the Chapelle royale; publ. 20 sets of romances, 3 books of vocal duets (nocturnes), and a harp-sonata.

From 1849, pupil of Marmontel at Paris Cons.; won 1st prize after 7 months' tuition, and was installed by Alard and Franchomme as pianist in their trio soirées. After a course of harmony and reading from a figured bass, in Bazin's class (1853), he retired for private study during ten years, and then reappeared as a pianist of finished technique and style. About 1900 he suddenly, without apparent reason, disappeared from public life, and settled as a farmer near Monte de Marsan, vowing that he should 'never be seen again in public.' He created nothing less than a sensation in 1915 when he was heard again in several concerts in Paris; but, in order to keep his strange vow, he was hidden from the view of the audience by a screen. Has made excellent transcriptions of classic pieces (Gluck, Mozart), but has publ. no original compositions.—Cf. O. Comettant, F. P. (Paris, 1874).

Plata'nia, Pietro, born Catania, April 5, 1828; d. Naples, April 26, 1907. Pupil of P. Raimondi at the Cons. there; 1863, Dir. of Palermo Cons.; later m. di capp. at Milan, and (1888) Dir. of the R. Plato, the eminent Greek philosopher (429–347 B. C.), formulated in his 'Timaeus' a system of musical harmony, eruditely interpreted by Th.-Henri Martin in his Études sur le Timée de Platon (Paris, 1841). R. von Westphal, in his Harmonik und Melopöie der Griechen (Leipzig, 1865), von Jan in Die Harmonie der Sphären (in 'Philogus,' vol. lii), and H. Abert's Die Lehre vom Ethos in der griechischen Musik (Leipzig, 1899), may also be consulted. Plato's thoughts on music are collected in an essay by Deyk in Weber's 'Cäcilia' (1828). P. likened the movements of music to those of the soul, whose development may therefore be influenced by musical art.

His pianoforte-teacher till his 15th year was Wanhal; Count Erdödy, his patron, then placed him under Haydn's care, with whom he lived 5 years. The count now app. him his private Kapellm., but granted leave of absence for further study in Rome, together with means of maintenance. P. remained in this congenial atmosphere until 1781, then making a brief visit to Vienna, and returning to Rome, departing for the second time, in 1783, to become 2d Kapellm. at the Strassburg Minster. He was advanced to 1st Kapellm. in 1789; lost his position through the mad attacks of the Revolution on Church and State, and went to London in the winter of 1791–2 on an invitation to conduct the Professional Concerts, a rival enterprise (though P. did not know it) to his old teacher Haydn's concerts under Salomon's management. These Professional Concerts were successful in themselves, but did not overwhelm the rival enterprise; P., after conducting them for a few years, returned to his property near Strassburg, but was subjected to such annoyances from the revolutionists that he sold his place in 1795, and went to Paris. Here he began business as a music-seller, and in 1807 founded a piano-factory, the growing prosperity of which gradually absorbed his attention, and caused him to give up composition. (The firm-name is now 'Pleyel, Wolff & Cie.'; the 100,000th instrument was sold in 1889.) Porpora, Niccolò Antonio, (signed his name 'Niccola,' but in his publ. works it is spelled 'Niccolò,') b. Naples, Aug. 19, 1686; d. there Feb., 1766. Until 1709 he studied at the Cons. di San Loreto under Greco, Padre Gaetano of Perugia, and Mancini. His first opera, Agrippina, was brought out in Naples in 1708; the following year Basilio, re di Oriente, was prod. at the Teatro de' Fiorentini, Naples, in which year he became maestro to the Portuguese ambassador. Berenice, written to order for the Teatro Capranica, Rome, and prod. in 1710, was praised by Handel. About 1712 he opened a vocal school in Naples, which soon attained celebrity through its illustrious pupils (Farinelli, Caffarelli, Senesino, il Porporino, Tosi, and others). In 1719 he was app. singing-teacher at the Cons. di San Onofrio, for which he wrote an oratorio, Il martirio di Santa Eugenia, in 1722. Meantime he had brought out 6 more operas, among them Faramondo (Naples, 1719), and had been made 'chamber-virtuoso' about 1721 to the Prince of Hesse-Darmstadt. Hasse came in 1724 to study under P., but left him for Aless. Scarlatti; P. never forgot or forgave the slight. In 1725 he was called to the Cons. degli Incurabili at Venice as singing-teacher, staying there till 1728, with the brief interruption of a rather unsuccessful trip to Vienna; then went to Dresden as singing-master to the Electoral princess, and maestro of the opera, but in 1729 obtained leave of absence to go to London, whither he was invited by the opposition to Handel. Here he prod. several operas (Ariadne, 1733; Agrippina, 1735; etc.), and two others on intermediate visits to Venice (Annibale, 1731; Mitridate, 1733); although he resigned his Dresden posts, he was unable to make head as a composer against Handel, and left London in 1736, settling in Venice, and becoming Dir. of the Cons. dell' Ospedaletto. About 1745 he returned to Vienna with the Venetian ambassador, and stayed there 3 years; Haydn was his pupil part of the time. From 1748–51 he was court Kapellm. at Dresden with Hasse, who was made 1st Kapellm. in 1750; the old grudge which P. bore his successful rival, and which had caused bitter competition during P.'s former sojourn in Dresden, very probably influenced the latter to leave the Saxon capital again, and forever. He returned to Naples in 1755, and in 1760 succeeded Abos as maestro at the cathedral and Dir. of the Cons. di San Onofrio. As a dramatic composer, however, he had already outlived his popularity; his last stage-work, Il trionfo di Camilla (Naples, 1760; really a slight revision and adaptation to a new text of an earlier opera of the same title prod. at Naples in 1740), was unsuccessful; and he is said to have died in such poverty that his friends had to raise a sum to secure his decent burial. His posthumous fame rests wholly on his wonderful ability as a teacher of singing, as which he was unique and unexcelled. He wrote 53 operas, and 6 oratorios, none of which have survived; many masses, and other church-music; numerous excellent cantatas for vocal solo with harpsichord (12 publ. in London, 1735); also publ. 6 Sinfonie da camera, for 2 violins, 'cello and bass (London, 1736); 12 violin-sonatas with bass (Vienna, 1754); 6 fugues for harpsichord (in Clementi's 'Practical Harmony'; 2 are in Pauer's 'Old Ital. Comps.'); a fine Trio-sonata (in D) was publ. by Riemann in 'Collegium musicum' (No. 23).—Cf. Marchese Villarosa, Memorie dei compositori di musica del regno di Napoli (Naples, 1840); F. Clément, Les musiciens célèbres depuis le XVI^me^ siècle (Paris, 1868; 4th ed. 1887).

Powell, John, b. Richmond, Va., Sept. 6, 1882. After graduation from the Univ. of Virginia (A. B., 1901) he st. in Vienna, pf. with Leschetizky (1902–7), and comp. with Navrátil (1904–7); pianistic début in Berlin in 1908; then played in Vienna, Paris, and London; Amer. début in New York in 1912. Although a very fine performer, it is as a composer that he has attracted most attention. While preserving the classical nomenclature in the titles of his works, the contents and musical development are anything but classical; for his themes P. generally uses Negro melodies, which he dresses in the most modern harmonic garb; nor is there (even in the so-called sonatas) much thematic development; almost all his works sound like free improvisations in cyclical forms.—Works: Op. 7, Sonate Virginianesque, for pf. and vl.; op. 13, Concerto for pf. and orch., in B m.; op. 15, Sonate psychologique, for pf.; op. 16, In the South, suite for pf.; op. 18, 3 songs; op. 19, String-quartet in E m.; op. 20, Vars. and double fugue on a theme by F. C. Hahr; op. 21, Sonate noble, for pf.; op. 22, At the Fair, suite for pf.; op. 23, Concerto for vl. and orch., in E; op. 24, Sonata Teutonica, for pf.

Powell, Maud, distinguished violinist; b. Peru, Illinois, Aug. 22, 1868. Her father, a writer of English-Welsh stock, and her mother, an amateur composer of Hungarian parentage, removed to Aurora, Ill., in 1870. After home-instruction, the daughter studied violin-playing with William Lewis of Chicago for four years, meanwhile appearing in minor concerts; this was supplemented by a year under Schradieck at Leipzig, and a course with Charles Dancla at the Paris Cons.; then, acting on Léonard's advice, she proceeded to London, played in concerts and also before the Queen, and made a provincial tour with the noted soprano Miss José Sherrington. Joachim, then in London, invited her to Berlin and continued her instruction until her début at a Philharm. Concert in 1885, with Bruch's G-minor concerto. Returning to New York the same year, she appeared with great success at a Philharm. Concert cond. by Theodore Thomas; toured America yearly for a number of seasons, and Germany and Austria in 1892 with the N. Y. Arion Society under Van der Stucken, as a 'representative American violinist,' as which she also played at the Chicago World's Fair in 1893, and read a paper on Woman and the Violin at the Women's Musical Congress. In 1894 she organized the Maud Powell String Quartet (O. Kovařik, 2d vln.; Joh. Miersch—later Franz Kaltenborn—viola; Paul Miersch, 'cello), with which she visited all leading American towns till its disbandment in 1898, when she revisited London and the British provinces, Germany, Holland, Belgium, France, Austria, Russia and Denmark; in America again 1900–1, followed by a season (1901) at London and another Continental tour, repeated with Sousa and his band in 1903 (30 weeks). In 1904 a second quartet-party was organized at New York with Louis Green, Jacob Altschuler and May Mukle, but disbanded after a few concerts on account of the leader's numerous solo engagements. Puccini [pŏŏ-chē'nē], Giacomo, foremost of contemporary Italian dramatic composers; b. Lucca, Dec. 23, 1858 [correct date; in autograph letter to Ed.]. Beginning with his great-great-grandfather, Giacomo (1712–81), all his ancestors in the direct line were musicians of local prominence: Antonio (1747–1832), Domenico (1771–1815), Michele (1813–64). As a child P. showed neither inclination nor special talent for music; but his mother, determined to continue the family tradition, sent him to the Istituto Musicale of Lucca (founded by Pacini), where Carlo Angeloni, a pupil of Michele P., became his teacher. After Angeloni's untiring patience had aroused interest, and then enthusiasm, in his pupil, progress was rapid, and P. soon was a good pianist and organist. About 1875 he became org. at the church in a near-by village, Muligliano, and soon after was also app. org. at San Pietro in Somaldi. In 1877 he submitted a cantata, Juno, to a competition held at Lucca, but failed to win the prize. Nevertheless, he prod. the work, which won considerable local success, so that the young composer brought out, also with success, a motet for the feast of Santa Paolina. These successes fired his ambition, and when he became acquainted about that time with Aïda he resolved to win laurels as a dramatic composer. Assistance from a grand-uncle and a stipend allowed by Queen Margherita enabled him to enter the Milan Cons., where he spent 3 years (1880–3) in serious study with Antonio Bazzini and Amilcare Ponchielli. For his graduation he wrote a Capriccio sinfonico, which at its perf. at one of the Cons. concerts, and later by Faccio, elicited unstinted praise from the critics. In the same year Ponchielli introduced P. to the librettist Fontana, who furnished him the text of a 1-act opera; in a few weeks the score was finished and sent to the Sonzogno competition. It did not win the prize, but on May 31, 1884, Le Villi was prod. at the Dal Verme Th. in Milan, with gratifying success. Ricordi, who was present, considered the work sufficiently meritorious to commission the young composer to write a new opera for him; but 5 years elapsed before this work, Edgar (3 acts, text by Fontana), was prod. at La Scala on April 21, 1889, scoring only a moderate succ. By this time P. had become convinced that, in order to write a really effective opera, he needed a better libretto than Fontana had provided. Accordingly, he commissioned Domenico Oliva to write the text of Manon Lescaut; during the composition, however, P. and Ricordi practically rewrote the entire book, and in the publ. score Oliva's name is not mentioned. With Manon Lescaut (4 acts), first prod. at the T. Regio in Turin on Feb. 1, 1893, P. won a veritable triumph, which was even surpassed by the next work, La Bohème (4 acts; text by Illica and Giocosa), prod. at the same theatre on Feb. 1, 1896. These two works not only carried their composer's name throughout the world, but also have found and maintained their place in the répertoire of every opera-house. With fame came wealth, and in 1900 he built at Lago del Torre, where he had been living since 1891, a magnificent villa. The next opera, Tosca (3 acts; text by Illica and Giocosa), prod. at the T. Costanzi in Rome on Jan. 14, 1900, failed to meet expectations, which the phenomenal success of its two predecessors had caused to be pitched too high. At its première at La Scala on Feb. 17, 1904, Madama Butterfly (1 act; text by Illica and Giocosa) was hissed. P. thereupon withdrew the score, and made some slight changes (division into 3 acts, and addition of the tenor air in the last scene). This revised version was greeted with frenzied applause in Brescia on May 28 of the same year. P. was now the acknowledged ruler of the Italian operatic stage, his works rivaling those of Verdi in the number of performances. The first perf. of Madama Butterfly at the M. O. H. (Feb. 11, 1907) took place in the presence of the composer, whom the management had invited specially for the occasion. It was then suggested that he should write an opera on an Amer. subject, the première to take place at the M. O. H. He found his subject when he witnessed a perf. of Belasco's The Girl of the Golden West, commissioned C. Zangarini and C. Civinini to write the libretto, and in the presence of the composer the world-première of La Fanciulla del West occurred, amidst scenes of boundless enthusiasm, at the M. O. H. on Dec. 10, 1910. But the enthusiasm subsided quickly; the following season the work had a few more performances, and then disappeared from the répertoire; it shared the same fate in Italy (1st Ital. perf. T. Costanzi, Rome, June 12, 1911) and other European countries. Since the outbreak of the war P. has completed La Rondine (3 acts; Monte Carlo, April, 1917) and Il Tabarro (1 act, after Didier Gold's La Houppelande; in rehearsal at Monte Carlo, Feb., 1917); he is at present (1917) writing Anima allegra (3 acts).—All operas but Edgar have been prod. in the U. S.: Le Villi (M. O. H., Dec. 17, 1908); Manon Lescaut (Wallack's Th., N. Y., May 27, 1898); La Bohème (ib., May 16, 1898); Tosca (M. O. H., Feb. 4, 1901); Madama Butterfly (Garden Th., N. Y., by Savage Opera Co. in English, Nov. 12, 1906).—It is as yet too early to attempt to fix P.'s place in music. Verdi regarded him as the most talented of Italian dramatic composers then living, an opinion which P.'s subsequent successes have justified. Since then many younger men have come forward, and still P. maintains his supremacy. Of all living Italian dramatic composers none rival him either in technical equipment or fertility of invention. His musical inspiration is almost entirely dependent upon the dramatic situation; whenever the poet soars, the composer follows and writes inspired, often superb, music; when the text descends to the level of the commonplace, the music becomes dull and labored. Madama Butterfly is P.'s masterpiece because the excellence of the text proved a constant inspiration; La Fanciulla del West is a failure because the very subject is unfit for a musical setting.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: M. Pugni [pŏŏ'ñē], Cesare, b. Milan, 1805; d. Petrograd, Jan. 26, 1870. Pupil of Asioli at the Milan Cons. Began his career as dramatic comp. in 1831 with Il Disertore svizzero (Milan), followed by several other operas of little importance; settled in Petrograd in 1840, and attracted attention with several succ. ballets, and in 1851 was app. comp. of ballets at the Imp. Th., where he prod. an enormous number of these works; wrote also many masses and some chamber-music.

Pugno [pŏŏ'ñoh], (Stéphane-) Raoul, b. (of an Ital. father) Montrouge, Seine, June 23, 1852; d. (on a concert-tour) Moscow, Jan. 3, 1914. From early childhood he showed unusual talent for the pf., appearing frequently in public. Prince Poniatowski was struck by his performance, and procured for him a scholarship at the École Niedermeyer; from 1866–9, at the Paris Cons., he st. pf. with G. Mathias, org. with F. Benoist, and comp. with A. Thomas; won 1st prize in pf. (1866), 1st prize in harm. (1867), 1st prize in org. (1869); his Ital. citizenship barred him from competition for the Prix de Rome. He began his career as organist at St.-Eugène in 1871; m. de chap. there in 1878; 1892–6 prof. of harm., and 1896–1901 prof. of pf., at the Paris Cons. Having become known as a successful composer of ballets and operettas, he surprised the world in 1893 by appearing as a solo pianist at one of the Cons. concerts, revealing himself as a virtuoso of the first rank; from then until his death he made triumphant tours of Europe and America (first tour, 1897–8). He was equally great as an ensemble-player, his sonata-recitals with Ysaÿe having become world-famous. P. is one of the imposing figures in the history of pf.-playing. First of all, he was a universalist; whether he interpreted early, classic, romantic, or modern works, it was impossible to distinguish whether he had any preferences; he played everything with authority, with scrupulous attention to the minutest details. At all times he subordinated his own personality—strong as it was—to that of the composer. His sense of tone and mastery of tonal shading were extraordinary, and a wonderful artistic moderation restrained him from ever forcing the tone of the instrument. He was a player of fiery temperament and intense musical feeling, a builder of superb climaxes, a performer in the grand style. The Welte-Mignon Co. has preserved his art in 21 records representing all styles from Couperin to d'Indy.—Works: An oratorio, La Résurrection de Lazare (1879); the opéras bouffes (all, except the first, at Paris) A qui la trompe (Asnières, 1877), Ninetta (1882), Le Sosie (1887), Le Valet de cœur (1888), Le Retour d' Ulysse (1889), La Vocation de Marius (1890), La petite Poucette (1891; as Der Talisman, Berlin, 1893); the ballets La Fée Cocotte (1881), Papillons (with C. Lippacher, 1881), Viviane (1886), La Danseuse de Corde (1892), Le Chevalier aux Fleurs (with A. Messager, 1897); a 'mimodrame' Pour le Drapeau (1895); a Suite d'orchestre (3 movems.); pf.-pcs. (sonata, mazurka, Feuillets d'Album, Pages d'Amour, Paysages, etc.). Pup'po, Giuseppe, an eccentric violinist; b. Lucca, June, 12, 1749; d. in poverty at Florence, April 19, 1827. Lived for years in London (till 1784), then in Paris as cond. at the Th. de Monsieur, and as fashionable accompanist and teacher, till 1811, and in Naples 1811–17 as maestro at the San Carlo Th.—Publ. 3 concertos, 3 violin-duets, 8 violin-études and 6 pf.-fantasias.

Pur'cell, Daniel, brother of Henry; b. London, c. 1660; d. there Dec. 12, 1717. Also an excellent musician, he became org. of Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1688; took his brother's place as dramatic composer in 1695, and was org. of St. Andrew's, Holborn, from 1713.—Works: Incid. music to ten dramas; several odes (e. g., funeral ode for his brother); publ. The Psalm Tunes set full for the Organ or Harpsichord . . . (n. d.); songs in collections.—Six anthems are in the choir-books of Magdalen Coll. chapel.—See Q.-Lex.

Pur'cell, Henry (called 'the younger,' because the son of Henry P., Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, and Master of the Choristers at Westminster Abbey), b. in St. Ann's Lane, Old Pye St., Westminster, London, in 1658; d. Dean's Yard, Westminster, Nov. 21, 1695. From 1664, the year of his father's death, he studied as a chorister of the Chapel Royal under Cooke and Humfrey, also receiving instruction from Dr. Blow. In 1680 he was appointed organist at Westminster Abbey; in 1682 he became organist of the Chapel Royal as Lowe's successor; in 1683, composer-in-ordinary to the King. His first printed comp. is a song in vol. i (1676) of Playford's 'Choice Ayres'; vol. ii (1679) contains several other songs, and an elegy on the death of Matthew Lock. In 1680 P. wrote the first of 29 'Odes' and 'Welcome Songs.' His first publ. chamber-music dates from 1683, Sonnatas of III. Parts: two viollins and basse: to the Organ or Harpsechord (with engraved portrait), 12 numbers, based on Italian models, each having an Adagio, a Canzone (fugue), a slow movem., and an air (3 reprinted by Augener). The Yorkshire Feast Song, called by D'Urfey, the author, 'one of the finest compositions he ever made,' was composed and produced in 1690. This is one of the 29 'Welcome Songs.' which he wrote (on an average of 2 annually) in his capacity of 'composer-in-ordinary.' Although the texts are almost invariably stupid or bombastic, P. wrote some of his finest music for these occasional odes. During the last five years he developed extraordinary activity in theatrical composition, to which he had given some attention since 1680, when he began to write incidental dances and occasional airs for various dramas. In spite of this close connection with the stage, he wrote only one opera, Dido and Æneas, prod. in 1688 or '89. It is probable that he died after a lingering illness (consumption); he lies in the north aisle of Westminster Abbey, and his burial-tablet well expresses contemporary estimation of his worth: "Here lyes Henry Purcell, Esq.; who left this life, and is gone to that blessed place where only his harmony can be exceeded." His church-music shows the original melodist, and a master of form, harmony, and all contrapuntal devices; his dramatic music is equally original in invention, dramatic instinct, and power of characterization; his chamber-works surpass those of his predecessors and contemporaries. His stage-music is as dramatic as and more melodious than that of his model, Lully; his sacred compositions were eagerly and profitably studied by Handel.—Works: Besides the comps. mentioned there were publ. during P.'s life a theoretical treatise, The Art of Descant, in the 10th ed. of Playford's 'Breefe Introduction to the Skill of Musick'

(1683); Playford also publ. several airs and 'symphonies' [written for various dramas] in 'The Theatre of Musick' (1685), anthems and sacred songs in 'Harmonia Sacra' (1688), and pieces for harpsich. in 'Musick's Handmaid' (part II, 1689); of the incid. music to plays there appeared Amphitryon (1690; the airs in the text, the instrl. pcs. in 'Ayres for the Theatre'), Dioclesian (1691), and 'Select ayres' from the Fairy Queen (1692). Expecially with regard to P.'s dramatic work there existed much uncertainty and confusion until the investigations of Barclay Squire in 1904 brought order out of chaos. According to him the correct list is as follows: 1680, Lee's Theodosius, D'Urfey's The Virtuous Wife; 1681, Tato's arr. of Shakespeare's Richard II, D'Urfey's Sir Barnaby Whigg; 1682, Beaumont and Fletcher's The Double Marriage; 1683, The English Lawyer (doubtful); 1685, Davenant's Circe (probable), Lee's Sophonisba; 1686, Beaumont and Fletcher's The Knight of Malta (only 1 catch); 1688, D'Urfey's A Fool's Preferment; 1690, Betterton's Dioclesian, Settle's Distressed Innocence, Norton's Pausanias, Southerne's Sir Anthony Love, Dryden's Amphitryon, Lee's The Massacre of Paris; 1691, Dryden's King Arthur, The Gordian Knot Untyed (author unknown), Dryden's The Indian Emperor, Southerne's The Wife's Excuse; 1692, Dryden's Cleomenes, The Fairy Queen (an arr. of the Midsummer Night's Dream), D'Urfey's The Marriage-hater Matched, Crowne's Regulus, Shadwell's The Libertine, Bancroft's Henry II, Dryden's Aurenge-Zebe, Dryden and Lee's Œdipus; 1693, Congreve's The Old Bachelor, D'Urfey's The Richmond Heiress, Southerne's The Maid's Last Prayer, Wright's The Female Virtuoses (after Molière), Congreve's The Double Dealer, Shadwell's Epsom Wells, Killigrene's Rule a Wife and Have a Wife; 1694, D'Urfey's Don Quixote (part I), Dryden's Love Triumphant, Crowne's The Married Beau, Southerne's The Fatal Marriage, Ravenscroft's The Canterbury Guests, D'Urfey's Don Quixote (part II), Shadwell's arr. of Timon of Athens, Dryden's The Spanish Friar, Dryden's Tyrannic Love; 1695, Behn's Abdelazer, Beaumont and Fletcher's Bonduca, Howard and Dryden's Indian Queen, Scott's The Mock Marriage, Gould's The Rival Sisters, Southerne's Oroonoko, Davenant and Dryden's arr. of The Tempest (doubtful), D'Urfey's Don Quixote (part III). In this list only Dioclesian, The Fairy Queen, The Indian Queen and King Arthur are provided with sufficient music to be possibly classed as 'semi-operas'; the music contributed to the other dramas consists of some airs and instrl. dances. P.'s widow, who survived him till 1706, publ. A Choice Coll. of Lessons for the Harpsichord or Spinet (1696), Ten Sonatas in Four Parts (1697), Orpheus Britannicus: A Coll. of all the choicest Songs . . . with . . . Symphonies for Violins or Flutes . . . (Part I, 1698, 2d ed. 1706; Part II, 1702, 2d ed. 1711; both parts in 1 vol., with the addition of several new numbers, 1721). Many comps. were publ. in Playford's 'Mercurius Musicus' (1699), Walsh's 'The Catch Club, or Merry Companions' (c. 1730), Boyce's 'Cathedral Music' (3 vols., 1760–73), Arnold's continuation of the same (4 vols., 1790), Page and Sexton's 'Harmonia Sacra' (3 vols., 1800). Vincent Novello collected all services, anthems, hymns, and sacred songs, and publ. them as P.'s Sacred Music (4 vols., 1829–32; very inaccurate). The Musical Antiquarian Soc. publ. Dido and Æneas (ed. G. A. Macfarren, 1840), Bonduca (ed. E. F. Rimbault, 1842; with historical sketch of dram. music in England), King Arthur (ed. E. Taylor, 1843), Ode for St. Cecilia's Day (ed. E. F. Rimbault, 1847). In 1876 the Purcell Society was formed in London for the purpose of publishing the first complete ed. of P.'s works (vol. i appeared in 1878; vol. xix, the last publ. so far [1917], in 1912). Pytha'goras, famous philosopher and mathematician; b. Samos, Greece, c. 582 B. C.; d. Metapontum, c. 500 B. C. His doctrines on the musical ratios are preserved in the writings of his followers, as P. himself wrote no books. The Pythagoreans (Archytas, Didymos, Eratosthenes, Euclid, Ptolemy, etc.) reckoned only the fifth and octave as pure consonances (the fourth being the fifth below); their system recognized only intervals reached by successive skips of pure fifths, their major third being the 4th fifth above (ratio 64 : 81, instead of the modern 64 : 80, or 4 : 5), their minor third the 3rd fifth below; etc. Their thirds and sixths were, consequently, dissonant intervals.

In 1717, during 3 months' leave of absence, he studied counterpoint with Zelenka and Fux at Vienna; in 1718 he became oboist in the Royal Polish orch. of Warsaw and Dresden, but soon took up the flute, which he studied under Buffardin. to London via Paris in 1726; and returned to Dresden in 1727, resuming his position as orchestral flute-player in 1728. In this year he played before Frederick the Great (then Crown Prince) at Berlin, and so pleased him that he engaged Q. to teach him the flute, and to make two long yearly visits to Berlin for that purpose. Frederick ascended the throne in 1740, and next year called Q. to Berlin (Potsdam) as chamber-musician and court composer at a salary of 2,000 Thaler, besides an honorarium for each composition furnished, and 100 ducats for each flute supplied by Q. Among living Russian composers R. unquestionably occupies the first place because of his pronounced inventive power and finely developed sense of tonal beauty. He keeps aloof from both impressionism and futurism. The stirring effect of his music proceeds from the inherent beauty and expressiveness of his themes and their logical, masterly development. Technically he has learned from the modern Russian and German masters, but his remarkable inventive power and rich imagination impress upon his work the stamp of unmistakable individuality. Although a master of all moods, he excels in the portrayal of the heroic. Nobility, directness, fire, and strength are the prominent characteristics of his music.—Works: The 3 1-act operas Aleko (Petrograd, 1893), Skupoy rÿtsarj [The Miser Knight] (Moscow, 1900; Boston, 1910), Francesca da Rimini (Moscow, 1906); 2 symphonies, op. 13 and 27; 3 pf.-concertos, op. 1, 18, 30; Der Felsen, fantasy for orch., op. 7; Capriccio bohémien for do., op. 12; Die Toteninsel, op. 29 (symph. poem after Böcklin); Trio élégiaque for pf., vl. and vcl., op. 9; a 'cello-sonata in G m., op. 19; Vesna (Spring) for bar. solo, ch. and orch., op. 20; The Bells (after Poe) for ch. and orch.; a Fantaisie for 2 pfs., op. 5; a suite for do., op. 17; 6 pcs. for pf. 4 hands, op. 11; 6 choruses for mixed vcs., op. 15; songs (op. 4, 8, 14, 21, 26, 34). Raff, Anton. See RAAFF.

Raff, Joseph Joachim, b. Lachen, Lake of Zurich, May 27, 1822; d. Frankfort-on-Main, June 25, 1882. The son of an organist, he was educated at Wiesenstetten, Württemberg, and at the Jesuit Lyceum in Schwyz; being too poor to take a University course, he then became a school-teacher, but continued the study of composition, and of the piano and violin, by himself. In 1843 he sent some MS. works to Mendelssohn; the latter recommended them to Breitkopf & Härtel, who publ. R.'s op. 2–14, all pf.-pieces. Thus encouraged, he gave up school-teaching for the career of a composer, and worked hard, though without improving his material condition for some time. Liszt invited him to accompany him on a concert-tour; R. went as far as Cologne (1846), and then intended to go to Mendelssohn at Leipzig, but Mendelssohn died in 1847, and R. remained in Cologne for a time, writing reviews for Dehn's 'Cäcilia,' and composing industriously. His hopes of remunerative employment by the Viennese publisher, Mechetti, were dashed by the latter's death; R. returned to Wiesenstetten, but often visited Stuttgart, and there met von Bülow, who greatly aided his reputation by publicly playing his Konzertstück; R.'s opera, König Alfred, was also accepted for performance at the court theatre; but the Revolution of 1848 again frustrated his hopes. In 1850 he joined Liszt at Weimar; entered heart and soul into the neo-German movement, which he championed in the 'Neue Zeitschrift für Musik,' and had the satisfaction of seeing his opera, König Alfred, brought out in revised form at Weimar (1851) by Liszt; though it never got any further. Until his death he always remained in close contact with Liszt, and rendered very material assistance in the instrumentation of several of L.'s symphonic poems. He publ. (1854) a pamphlet, Die Wagnerfrage. In 1856 he followed the actress Doris Genast (b. 1826; d. Munich, Nov. 7, 1912) to Wiesbaden, and married her in 1859. In Wiesbaden he was in great demand as a pf.-teacher. In 1863 his first symphony, An das Vaterland, won the prize of the Viennese 'Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde' over 32 competitors; in 1870 a second opera, Dame Kobold (comic), was prod. at Weimar; and in 1877 he was app. Director of the Hoch Cons. at Frankfort, where he remained till his death (from apoplexy).—Raff was a composer of prodigious fertility of invention, an inexhaustible vein of melody, and thorough mastery over the technical and formal requirements of composition. He wrote over 230 works of very unequal value; poverty, the demands of publishers and 'popularity,' and his own native facility, conspired to induce rapidity of writing; yet his masterpieces, like the 3rd and 5th symphonies (Im Walde and Lenore), the orchl. overtures op. 101 and 194, the pf.-concerto op. 185, the 'cello-concerto op. 193, etc., won him, both with regard to originality and fine workmanship, a leading place among contemporary composers. It is a pity that soon after his death his popularity began to wane rapidly; by the end of the century even the best of the orchl. works had fallen into complete oblivion. Occasional revivals of the once immensely popular symphonies Nos. 3 and 5 have only emphasized the absolute hopelessness of ever restoring them to favor. The Raff Memorial Soc. publ. (Frankfort, 1886) a complete list of his works. A full list is also given in Grove.—Cf. E. A. Schäfer, Chronologisches-systematisches Verzeichnis der Werke Raffs (Wiesbaden, 1888); R. Gandolfi, La Musica di G. R., in 'Note illustrative di due accademie. . .' (Florence, 1904).

Rameau [răh-moh'], Jean-Philippe, the creator of the modern science of harmony, and an original and distinguished dramatic composer, was born at Dijon, Sept. 25, 1683; died Paris, Sept 12, 1764. [The date of birth, Oct. 23, recorded on the R. monument at Dijon, cannot be correct, since the certificate of baptism in the church of St.-Étienne is dated Sept. 25. All biographers give this date also as the date of birth.] Of a musical family, at 7 he could play at sight, on the harpsichord, any music given him; from 10 to 14 he attended the Jesuit College at Dijon; then devoted himself to music, and in 1701 was sent to Italy, but found the prevailing style not at all to his liking, and joined the orchestra of a travelling French opera-troupe as violinist. In 1702 he was asst.-organist at Notre-Dame in Avignon; in June of that year he became org. at the Cath. in Clermont-en-Auvergne. In 1706 he publ. his first Livre de pièces de clavecin in Paris, where he probably had been living since the spring of 1705. Until 1708 he remained in Paris as org. of 2 minor churches, having competed unsuccessfully for the post of Ste.-Madeleine in 1706. In 1709 he became his father's successor at the Cath. in Avignon; in 1714 he was org. in Lyons. When he returned to his former post at the Cath. in Clermont is not known, but the title-page of his Traité de l'Harmonie (1722) mentions him as organist there. This epoch-making work, though little understood at the time, attracted considerable attention and roused opposition, so that when he settled definitely in Paris (1723) he was by no means unknown. He became organist at Sainte-Croix-de-la-Bretonnerie, and soon was recognized as the foremost organist in France. The fact that he failed in 1727 in a competition for the position of org. at St.-Vincent-de-Paul did not injure his reputation, for it was generally known that Marchand (probably out of jealousy) had exerted his powerful influence in favor of Daquin, who was in every respect inferior to R. In 1726 appeared his Nouveau système de musique théorique, an introduction to the Traité. The leading ideas of his system of harmony are (1) chord-building by thirds; (2) the classification of a chord and all its inversions as one and the same, thus reducing the multiplicity of consonant and dissonant combinations to a fixed and limited number of root-chords; (3) his invention of a fundamental bass ('basse fondamentale'), which does not correspond to our thorough-bass, but is an imaginary series of the root-tones forming the real basis of the varied chord-progressions employed in a composition. The stir which these novel theories occasioned, and his reputation as the foremost French organist, by no means satisfied Rameau's ambition; his ardent desire was to bring out a dramatic work at the Opéra. He had made a modest beginning with dramatic music in 1723, when he wrote some dances and divertissements for Alexis Piron's fairy burlesque l'Endriague, which was prod. at the Th. de la Foire St.-Germain. In 1726 he brought out at the same theatre two light operas by the same poet, l'Enrôlement d' Arlequin (Feb. 28) and La Robe de dissention, ou le Faux Prodige (autumn). Having become music-master to the wife of the 'fermier-général,' M. la Poupelinière, the latter obtained of Voltaire a libretto on Samson, which R. set to music; but it was rejected on account of its biblical subject. A second libretto, by Abbé Pelegrin, was accepted, and Hippolyte et Aricie was produced at the Opéra in 1733; its reception was cool, despite undeniable superiority (over the operas of Lully and his following) in the rich and varied harmony and instrumentation; and Rameau almost renounced dramatic composition; but the persuasions of his friends, who also influenced public opinion in his favor, were effective; in 1735 he brought out the successful opera-ballet Les Indes galantes, and in 1737 his masterpiece, Castor et Pollux, a work which for years held its own beside the operas of Gluck. A career of uninterrupted prosperity commenced; he was recognized as the leading theorist of the time, and his instruction was eagerly sought; for the next 30 years his operas dominated the French stage; the King created for him the office of cabinet-composer, and later raised him to the nobility.—From the beginning of his dramatic career R. roused opposition, and at the same time found enthusiastic followers. The first war of words was waged between the 'Lullistes et Ramoneurs.' This had scarcely been ended by a triumphant revival of Pygmalion in 1751, when the production of Pergolesi's La Serva Padrona 1752) caused a more prolonged and bitter controversy between the adherents of R. and the 'Encyclopédistes,' known as 'La Guerre des Boufons,' in which R. took a very active part with a number of essays defending his position. Practically the same charges were made against him as a century later against Wagner: unintelligible harmony, lack of melody, preponderance of discords, noisy instrumentation, etc. But when the war between Gluckists and Piccinnists was raging, R.'s works were praised as models of beauty and perfection. It is a matter for regret that R. was so indifferent to the quality of his libretti; he relied so much upon his musical inspiration that he never could be brought to a realization of the importance of a good text; hence the inequality of his operas. Nevertheless, his operas mark a decided advance over Lully's in musical characterization, expressive melody, richness of harmony, variety of modulation, and individuality of instrumentation.—WRITINGS: Traité d'harmonie . . . Fauré (comp.); won the 2d Prix de Rome in 1901 with the cantata Myrrha; competed twice unsuccessfully for the 1st prize with the cantatas Alcyone (1902) and Alyssa (1903). Among modern French composers R. occupies a place of prominence second perhaps only to Debussy. Although both are impressionists, and both emphasize the development of the underlying poetical idea as opposed to the thematic, formal development of the classicists, the younger composer is by no means an imitator of the older. In fact, R. makes little use of the whole-tone scale or the chord of the ninth; in his music the chord of the seventh plays a leading rôle. He is more robust than most impressionists, and while he goes as far in the employment of bold harmonies, unresolved dissonances, and constantly changing rhythms, he does not sacrifice definite outline to mere 'atmospheric' vagueness. His art is one of finely wrought detail, and shows to best advantage in the smaller forms (songs and pf.-pcs.). His orchestral technic, especially his original combinations of the different timbres of the individual instruments, is a direct development of the method of Rimsky-Korsakov.—Works: The musical comedy l'Heure espagnole (Op.-Com., May 19, 1911); the ballets Daphnis et Chloë, La Mère l'Oye (after a suite for pf.), and Adélaide ou le Langage des Fleurs (after the Valses nobles et sentimentales for pf.) Bertrand), Menuet (on the name of Haydn), Valses nobles et sentimentales, Prélude;—Songs: Ballade de la Reine morte d'aimer (R. de Marès; not publ.), Un grand Sommeil noir (Verlaine; not publ.), Sainte (Mallarmé), Deux Épigrammes (Marot), Si morne (Verhaeren; not publ.), Manteau de Fleurs (P. Gravollet; also w. orch.), Le Noël des jouets (M. Ravel; do.), Les grands vents venus d'Outre-Mer (H. de Régnier), Histoires Naturelles (5 poems by J. Renard), Sur l'Herbe, Vocalise en forme d'Habanera. He has edited 5 popular Greek melodies (Fr. tr. by Calvocoressi), a French, an Italian, a Spanish and a Hebrew melody [a Scotch, a Flemish and a Russian, in MS.]; has arr. Removing to Kishinev in 1898, he founded a branch of the Imp. Russ. Mus. Soc.; in 1901 he returned to Moscow, where he has been living since, devoting his entire time to composition. The works of his 'first period' (op. 1–9) are pleasing and poetical, without striking originality; with op. 10 (Esquisses for piano) he enters a new field. He declared music to be the 'language of emotion,' and thus, as 'our feelings have no prepared and conventional forms and terminations, music should give them corresponding expression.' Hence his disregard of set forms, his weird harmonies and dissonant closes; he is, in fact, a leading light of modern musical décadence. Nevertheless, some of his compositions are musically of value. An entirely new departure are his Mélomimiques (op. 11, 15, 17), short lyric pieces for pf., in which music and mimicry are supposed to explain and interpret one another. He has also written a number of vocal melomimics (Gesang-Melomimik, op. 1, 16, 19, 20), 3 Rythmo-déclamations for pf. (op. 32) and 20 do. for voice and pf. Reed, Thomas German, b. Bristol, June 27, 1817; d. Upper East Sheen, Surrey, March 21, 1888. At ten he appeared as a pianist and singer in Bath; soon afterwards at the Haymarket Th., London, where his father was cond., and where, in 1838, he himself became mus. director (until 1851). He greatly improved the quality of the music given there, and took an active part in the mus. life of London. In 1844 he married Miss Priscilla Horton [b. Birmingham, Jan. 1, 1818; d. Bexley Heath, March 18, 1895; a fine actress and contralto singer], and with her aid started the celebrated 'Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's Entertainment' in 1855, to provide unobjectionable dramatic amusement for persons opposed to theatre-going. The entertainments began in St. Martin's Hall as 'Miss P. Horton's Illustrative Gatherings,' with small dialogue-plays; were at the Gallery of Illustration, Regent Street, from 1856, gradually increasing the little company until it numbered 7 members, and adding 'opere da camera' for four characters to the repertory. These entertainments were uniformly successful, and were continued by his son, Alfred German Reed, who died in London, March 10, 1895. A full list of the plays produced is to be found in GROVE.

Début (as a baritone) at Newcastle-on-Tyne, in the rôle of Rodolfo (Sonnambula), in 1839. Studied further under Hobbs and Cooke, and sang minor tenor parts in Der Freischütz, etc., at Drury Lane, 1842–3; studied in Paris under Bordogni, and in Milan under Mazzucato, appearing at La Scala, in 1846, as Edgardo (Lucia), reappearing at Drury Lane, 1847, in the same rôle, with great success. Reger [rā'gĕr], Max, b. Brand, Bavaria, March 19, 1873; d. Jena, May 11, 1916. In 1874 his father, a school-teacher and good organist (d. 1905 in Munich), removed to Weiden, where R. attended the Realschule. Although he was intended for the schoolmaster's career, he received thorough instruction on the pf. and harmonium from his father, and on the organ and in theory (acc. to Riemann's system) from organist Lindner. At an early age he began to write pf.-pcs. and chamber-music, and after hearing Die Meistersinger and Parsifal in Bayreuth (1888) he gave expression to the emotions created in him by those masterpieces in an ambitious symphonic poem, Héroïde funèbre (score lost). In 1889 he passed the entrance-examination for the teachers' seminary. But by that time music had taken such complete possession of him that he submitted a number of MSS. to H. Riemann, who immediately recognized the young man's unusual talent. Accordingly, R. became Riemann's pupil at the Sondershausen Cons. in April, 1890, and in 1891 followed him to the Wiesbaden Cons., where he cont. his studies till 1895, and also taught pf. and org. (till 1896). Having served a year in the army, he settled in Weiden as composer, writing the works up to about op. 50. However, he did not attract general attention until 1901, when he removed to Munich, whence he undertook pianistic tours through Germany, Austria and Switzerland. From 1905–6 he was prof. of cpt. at the Kgl. Akademie der Tonkunst, and cond. of the 'Porges'scher Gesangsverein'; in 1907 he was called to Leipzig as Musikdir. at the Univ. (also cond. of the Univ. chorus 'Zu St. Pauli') and prof. of comp. at the Cons.; the former post he resigned in 1908, but the latter he retained till his death; 1911–15, Hofkapellm. in Meiningen; then lived at Jena, where he died suddenly of paralysis of the heart. In 1908 he was made Kgl. Prof., and Dr. phil. (hon. c., Univ. of Jena); in 1911 Hofrat, and in 1913 Generalmusikdirektor.—Musical opinion is divided as to the value of R.'s work. Admirers are fond of summarizing the development of pure instrumental music in this brief formula—Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Reger. While R. undoubtedly possesses certain qualities of his great predecessors (lofty idealism, daring originality, remarkable inventive power, amazing contrapuntal skill), there are, unfortunately, other qualities which seriously impair these positive virtues. His continual employment of the maximum of technical resources is responsible for a lack of variety and an absence of thrilling climaxes; his fatal facility in writing leads him to develop most works to inordinate length. Riemann criticized the first (unpubl.) works submitted to him in 1889 for being overloaded with contrapuntal complexities. Instead of cultivating restraint, Reger allowed this tendency to develop until he had practically lost all sense of proportion and propriety. Only in such set forms as the Fugue and Variations does he attain clarity and proper balance of details. He was also unduly influenced by modern impressionism, and when he adds harmonic extravagance to an overladen contrapuntal apparatus, the technical analysis of such a work becomes a puzzle rather than a severe mental problem, and the actual hearing a positive strain. One of the infallible attributes of the highest genius is the power of producing sublime effects by the simplest means; simplicity, however, has no place in Reger's scheme of things, not even in his so-called 'children's songs.' The greatest number of admirers R. has won through his remarkably fine works for organ, which may ultimately determine the composer's place in the history of music.—BIBLIOGRAPHY: R. On the French invasion he returned to Paris; brought out the moderately successful comic operas Cagliostro (1810), Natalie (1816), and Sapho (1822); but gained a high reputation as a theorist and teacher (some of his pupils were Jelensperger, Elwart, Lefebvre, and Dancla), also as an instrumental composer. Rei'chardt, Johann Friedrich, born Königsberg, Nov. 25, 1752; d. Giebichenstein, n. Halle, June 27, 1814. A pupil of C. G. Richter (pf. and comp.) and Veichtner (violin), he later studied philosophy at the Universities of Königsberg and Leipzig; travelled, a keen observer, through Germany (1771–4); and on Agricola's death in 1775 applied for, and obtained, the post of Kapellm. to Frederick the Great. After a visit to Italy in 1782 he founded (1783) the 'Concerts spirituels' for the performance of new works, for which he wrote short analytical programs. During a long leave of absence in London and Paris (1785–6) he brought out his Passion music (after Metastasio) in both cities, and was commissioned to write two operas, Tamerlan and Panthée, for the Grand Opéra; Frederick's death necessitated his hasty return to Berlin, and the operas were not produced. Friedrich Wilhelm II. allowed him to enlarge the orchestra, and to obtain new singers from Italy; but later, hearing of R.'s sympathy with the French Revolution, suspended him for 3 years, and dismissed him in 1794. R. lived in Altona till 1797; was then app. Inspector of the salt works at Giebichenstein, and held the appointment after his return to Berlin on the King's decease in the same year. Friedrich Wilhelm III increased his salary; but the French invasion drove him to Königsberg in 1806, and on Jerome Napoleon's threat to confiscate his property R. joined him at Kassel, and became his court conductor. On account of disagreements with the authorities, R. was soon granted leave of absence, which he improved by visiting Vienna to produce his operas and Singspiele; the trip was unsuccessful, and he returned to Giebichenstein, where he remained until his death.—For Berlin and Potsdam R. composed numerous Italian and German operas, incid. music to plays, and German Singspiele, the latter exercising considerable influence on the development of German opera. He also wrote a Passion; cantatas (sacred and secular); psalms, 2 Te Deums; etc.; as a song-composer [cf. Lindner, Geschichte des deutschen Liedes] he ranks high (he set about 60 of Goethe's lyrics to music); his instrl. music includes 7 symphonies (the Schlachtsymphonie celebrates the battle of Leipzig), a Victory overture, 14 pf.-concertos, a concertante f. string-quartet and orch., a quintet f. pf. w. 2 flutes and 2 horns, 2 pf.-quartets, 6 string-trios, a violin-concerto, 11 violin-sonatas, 17 pf.-sonatas, a flute-sonata. An extremely diligent writer, he edited a number of mus. periodicals; and publ. Über die deutsche komische Oper (1774), Über die Pflichten des Ripienvioliniſten (1776), Briefe eines aufmerksamen Reisenden, die Musik betreffend (2 parts; 1774, '76), Schreiben über die Berlinische Musik (1775), Vertraute Briefe aus Paris (1804, 1805; 3 parts), Vertraute Briefe, geschrieben auf einer Reise nach Wien (2 vols.; 1810). Berlin, 1752; d. there May 9, 1783) was a fine pianist, who also publ. a number of songs.—Cf. H. M. Schletterer, *J. F. R.
